Murdoch adds U.S. to DBS empire

His News Corp. joins MCI to launch satellite-to-home service in fall 1997; MCI's $700 bid for national DBS channels proves winner

By Rich Brown

G lobetrotting media mogul Rupert Murdoch is at it again. To further cement his position as the global leader in television distribution. Murdoch and partner MCI are embarking on a direct broadcast satellite venture with hopes of grabbing as much as 20% of the U.S. DBS market by 2000.

The venture will spend $1.2 billion to get the service up and running, according to MCI Chief Financial Officer Doug Maine. Start-up costs include the $682.5 million paid to the FCC last week for use of the spectrum plus $500 million-$550 million for the satellites needed to distribute the service (including ground station, launch and insurance costs). The $1.2 billion does not include costs associated with selling and advertising the service.

MCI is contributing the $682.5 million cost of the spectrum, and News Corp. will cover other cash costs, says Maine. The companies will split all costs—losses and gains—equally. Maine expects that other partners eventually will join and change the 50-50 structure between MCI and News Corp. The companies also are considering a public offering tied to the venture, he says.

Maine says the DBS project "perhaps" will be funded out of MCI's earlier announced $2 billion investment in News Corp. MCI last year committed $2 billion to help fund entertainment and news programing that would be delivered worldwide via computers and TV. One outgrowth of that agreement, an ambitious online service called iGuide, is expected to debut next month.

The partners anticipate positive earnings within three to four years of the fall 1997 launch of their DBS service, according to Maine. He says cash flow will be positive within two years of the launch and that they hope to grab 10%-20% of the total 12 million-15 million subscribers expected to sign up for DBS service by 2000.

While existing high-power DBS services DIRECTV and USSB primarily target the consumer market, the MCI/ News Corp. venture plans to chase both consumers and businesses. It will carry familiar cable networks as well as news and entertainment services from News Corp.'s vast operation (which includes the Fox Television Network, 20th Century Fox and several newspapers and broadcast outlets around the world). Some of the 150-200 channels at launch will be dedicated to business information services.

DIRECTV President Eddy Hartenstein points out that because MCI/News Corp. had to buy its spectrum, it will be saddled with twice the start-up costs that DIRECTV had when it launched in June 1994.

The $682.5 million "just gets the license; this dollar amount doesn't address the satellites and ground infrastructure you have to put in to do it," says Hartenstein.

He is also skeptical that MCI can meet the two-year launch schedule promised by MCI Chairman Bert Roberts. "Unless [MCI] can find a couple of satellites lying around, they're looking at probably mid-to-end of 1998 at the earliest to get into the business."

So far, News Corp. has seen mixed results on its DBS ventures. The jewel in the crown is six-year-old UK service BSkyB. News Corp. owns a 40% stake in the service, which has just signed its 5 millionth customer and is forecast to make a $382 million profit in 1996. Europeans are waiting to see if the fastgrowing DBS company expands out-

Parting ways on digital TV?

Broadcasters appear split over how to proceed in the ongoing congressional debate over digital TV spectrum.

Fox and CBS are prepared to accept a compromise that would give broadcasters a second channel for the transition to digital TV, but require the early return of their current analog channels, sources say. During the transition, stations would simulcast conventional analog and new digital signals.

But NBC, Capital Cities/ABC and the National Association of Broadcasters are hanging tough, insisting on second channels and a long transition period, sources say.

Another source says Fox and CBS would accept the early-return compromise only if faced with the alternative of a digital auction.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.) and other key lawmakers have been arguing against giving broadcasters extra spectrum. Some of them seized on the news that MCI has agreed to pay $700 million for DBS (see next page). The success of the auction shows that broadcasters should pay, Senator John McCain (R-Ariz.) told the Washington Post.

To quell such talk, Fox lobbyist Preston Padden last Friday sent lawmakers a letter saying the auctioning of spectrum for a pay service like DBS should have no bearing on a free service like broadcasting. "You can't have free TV if you auction the spectrum," he said. —HAJ -Topof the Week-side the UK, possibly in partnership with CLT.

Asia's pan-regional Star TV network, acquired by Murdoch for $871 million, may prove to be a far more difficult path to profitability. News Corp. has already spent $1.5 billion on Star, and the service is bleeding more than $100 million a year.

Still to launch is a joint venture to provide DBS service to Latin America. News Corp. and its partners in that project—Televisa, PanAmSat, Globo Organization and top U.S. cable system operator Tele-Communications Inc.—expect to begin providing service by late spring.

DBS auctions yield $735 million

MCI and EchoStar win channels

"We went into the auction with the intention to win," said MCI Chairman Bert Roberts. And win he did, with a $682.5 million bid for the last available DBS slot with full coverage of the continental U.S.

The level of bidding in last week's DBS auction surprised many observers who believed the 28 channels at the 110 degree west longitude orbital slot would raise no more than $300 million.

The auction was a "spectacular success," said FCC Chairman Reed Hundt. "It's a very big chunk of change for the treasury." In fact, the DBS revenue is relatively small change. The FCC's take from the auction of wireless telephone spectrum is $10 billion and counting.

MCI had promised the FCC that it would begin the bidding at $175 million. The long-distance company's opening bid Wednesday of $175,175,175 emphasized that it had made good on its promise.

Perhaps the biggest surprise of the auction was Echo-Star, which already has DBS channels at 119 degrees and plans to introduce service in March. EchoStar outlasted Tele-Communications Inc., which withdrew when the bidding hit $367 million. EchoStar went to $650 million on Thursday. MCI, EchoStar and TCI were the only bidders.

Having come up short in the auction, TCI is reverting, at least temporarily, to its medium-power satellite broadcasting strategy through Primestar Partners (see story, below).

EchoStar did not go home empty-handed. On Friday it came up with $52.3 million to outbid MCI for a second block of 24 DBS channels at 148 degrees. The channels are considered less valuable because they are too far west to provide service to the East Coast.

FCC rules limit each company to only one DBS slot with coverage of the entire continental U.S. -CSS

AT&T skips auction for DIRECTV

Instead of bidding for a DBS license of its own, AT&T last week opted to invest $137.5 million in DIRECTV and apply its considerable marketing muscle to selling the service.

AT&T is acquiring a 2.5% equity stake in the Hughes Communications pioneer DBS company, with an option to increase its investment to as much as 30% over five years. Just how close AT&T will get to that 30% mark depends on its ability to bring new subscribers to DIRECTV.

Knowing that its long-distance rival MCI would enter the DBS bidding, AT&T had considered jumping in too. But it figured it would cost $1 billion and take two years to deploy its own system, says Joseph Nacchio, executive vice president of the company's consumer/smallbusiness division. The DIRECTV deal gives AT&T a strong head start in DBS at a much lower cost of entry, he says.

AT&T plans to begin marketing the service to its 90 million long-distance-telephone customers this summer. In addition to using traditional AT&T direct marketing and advertising, it will offer special DIRECTV deals to the 25 million customers in its "True Rewards" program and finance reception equipment for the 12 million holders of AT&T credit cards. It will market the service at its retail outlets.

One surefire way to reach out to AT&T's customers will be to put DIRECTV ads on phone bills. Eventually, AT&T customers with DIRECTV subscriptions will receive one bill.

In its 18 months of operation, DIRECTV has signed 1.25 million subscribers and a network of 20,000 retailers nationally. Subscribers pay a onetime equipment cost of $499-$699 plus a monthly subscription fee. ----RB

What's next for TCI, Primestar?

By Chris McConnell

Cl and Primestar are not giving up on high-power DBS, although they are sticking with their medium-power services for now.

Primestar, which comprises a group of cable companies including TCI, has signed a deal with GE Americom to stay at medium power. But company chairman/CEO James Gray says a high-power service "is definitely in our future at some point."

High-power service—like that offered by DIRECTV and United States Satellite Broadcasting—allows distributors to beam pictures to smaller, 18inch receiving dishes. The mediumpower Primestar uses a 36-inch dish, although the company plans to introduce a 30-inch dish this year.

TCl says it is not leaving the Primestar group, even though it went it alone to bid for the last orbital slot covering the continental U.S.

But TCI also still plans to be in the high-power business and hopes to use the two high-power DBS satellites that subsidiary Tempo DBS has ordered from manufacturer Space Systems/ Loral, says TCI Executive Vice President Bob Thomson.

Primestar's new satellite deal calls for 24 transponders on the GE-2 satellite slated for launch in fourth quarter 1996. The contract runs four years, with an option to extend it to 15. The capacity will allow Primestar to add some 50 channels to its current stock of 95.

"We think we have a good game plan to go to the market with," says Gray. He puts his company's breakeven point at almost 2 million subscribers and adds that his company is more than halfway there.

Broadcasters will meet with Clinton, but...

Although happy to discuss state of their programing, industry opposition to V-chip, ratings system remains

By Chris McConnell

hey are happy to discuss it with the President, but broadcasters still don't like the V-chip.

That was the reaction voiced last week to Clinton's State of the Union call for V-chip legislation and for a meeting with broadcasting industry leaders at the White House.

"To the media: I say you should create movies, CDs and television shows you would want your own children and grandchildren to enjoy," Clinton said during the speech.

"To make the V-chip work," Clinton said, "I challenge the broadcast industry to come to the White House next month to work with us on concrete ways to improve what our children see on television." The White House said the meeting agenda also will include a discussion of voluntary ways to achieve the President's goal of three hours per week of children's TV. Broadcasters voiced plans to accept his invitation.

"CBS would be happy to meet with the President at any time to discuss matters of importance to the American viewing public," said a CBS spokesman.

CapCities/ABC and NBC voiced similar responses, but all three networks also pointed to continuing "concerns" with V-chip legislation. The National Association of Broadcasters said the V-chip "in essence requires a government-imposed ratings system."

The pending V-chip provisions would require each television sold in the U.S. to carry circuitry capable of blocking programing deemed violent or sexually explicit. The circuitry would read violence or sex ratings encoded into the programs broadcast by TV stations.

"I would hate to see the entertainment industry create programing that only six-year-olds would enjoy," James Hedlund, president of the Association of Local Television Stations,

'To make the V-chip work, I challenge the broadcast industry to come to the White House next month to work with us on concrete ways to improve what our children see on television.'

said of the proposal.

NBC Executive Vice President/General Counsel Richard Cotton expressed hopes that the broadcasters next month will be able to argue for technology that does not rely on encoded ratings. "I think that there's common ground that there should be technology available to parents," Cotton said.

FCC Chairman Reed Hundt said he hopes broadcasters will embrace a change in their "social contract" with viewers. "The situation is not everybody versus the broadcasters."

Hundt said a network CEO told him there might be solutions to the problem of finding ad revenue to support children's educational TV.

O.J. Simpson interview scores big for BET

BET did not agree to ground rules for Ed Gordon's

Black Entertainment Television hit a double last week, scoring television's first posttrial interview with O.J. Simpson and winning the highest ratings in its16-year history.

Simpson was scheduled to be interviewed on CNN and NBC, but he canceled both on the advice of his lawyers after neither network would agree to rules about questions.

The live interview, part of a interview with Simpson, nor did it brief him on the questions it would ask. two-and-a-half-hour special interview with Simpson, nor did it brief him on the questions it would ask. titled O.J. Simpson: Beyond the Verdict, began 10 minutes late because Simpson was caught in traffic on the Although some n way to the undisclosed studio site in Los Angeles.

The interview last Wednesday (Jan. 24) at 10 p.m. ET was seen in an estimated 3 million households and got a 6.9 overnight Nielsen rating, far outscoring BET's previous highest rating, a 1992 interview with singer Whitney Houston that drew a 1.2.

The basic cable service, with a universe of 44.2 million households, typically averages a .7 rating, or 300,000 homes, in prime time.

BET officials say the network did not agree to rules for questions that Simpson would be asked by BET news anchor Ed Gordon, who set the tone for the evening with his first question: "Did you kill Nicole Brown-Simpson and Ronald Goldman?"

BET did not pay Simpson, but he was permitted to buy time before and after the show to promote his $29.95 two-and-half-hour video, which will be released next month.

Although some media reports before the telecast criticized BET for agreeing to what was predicted would be a "cream puff" interview, many post-interview reports praised the network and Gordon.

Debra Tang, BET's VP, news and public affairs, did not rule out another BET interview: "After Simpson finishes his deposition and his tape is out, [BET] will be back there, like all the other networks, at the O.J. well trying to get some more water."

The times they are a-changin'

The end of fin-syn and PTAR and restructuring of the broadcasting industry are leading to new alliances between buyers and sellers; so far, the buyers are ahead

By Cynthia Littleton

The action on the floor of this year's NATPE convention reflected fundamental changes in the broadcasting industry brought about by a wave of mega-mergers, strategic alliances and regulatory reform.

Most of the shows inching toward the 75% clearance benchmark at NATPE went to the convention with group deals in place with network O&Os or the leading independents: Tribune Broadcasting and Chris Craft/United Television. Syndicators say those broadcast entities with strong stations in the top 10 markets have the power to make or break firstrun shows, although analysts say ABC's pending merger with Disney opens up a world of possibilities. NBC and CBS have led the charge in taking advantage of the demise of the fin-syn regulations that kept the networks out of the syndication business for the past two decades. Guaranteed clearances on the O&O groups give the networks leverage in attracting production and distribution partners and securing national clearances.

The networks' new muscle in the syndication arena, coupled with last year's launch of UPN and the WB Network, has produced cutthroat competition among syndicators for the shrinking pool of available time slots on strong stations in key markets. Small and medium-size station groups such as Allbritton, Meredith, Hearst and Scripps Howard are wielding more clout with syndicators than ever before.

Many NATPE attendees agreed that it was a buyer's market for a generally lackluster crop this year. "It's very definitely been a buyer's market, more so than ever before," said Bill Carroll, vice president and director of programing for Katz Television. The trend in programing alliances probably will narrow the choices available to broadcasters, as the shows will be tailored to the needs of specific groups, Carroll said.

"The first-run business needs some new hits," said Randy Reiss, executive vice president, Walt Disney Television and Telecommunications. "Nothing new has really worked well in syndication except off-net last year, and that hurts everybody who tries to launch new shows." Disney's Buena Vista Television opted not to bring out any new firstrun shows this year, aside from two animated programs for its Disney Afternoon kids block, because of the upheaval in the marketplace. Fox's Twentieth Television made the same call this year, choosing to focus on renewals of its existing shows and the off-network launches of the hour dramas NYPD Blue and The X-Files.

In the off-network arena, the formal end of the prime time access rule era in September promises to have a profound effect on programing strategies in the top 50 markets.

The Tribune group's recent purchase of the off-network rights to the hit NBC sitcom Friends was a preemptive strike to keep Big Three affiliates from driving up the bidding for the show in the top markets. But the sale also is indicative of increasingly complex relationships between major players in the broadcast universe. The WB Network-affiliated Tribune stations will run the Warner Bros.-produced sitcom in access in an effort to deliver young-adult "dream demographics" to The WB's prime time schedule. Tribune owns -Topof the Week-an equity stake in the fledgling network. But the competition for A-list off-network product already is heating up. Friends recently was purchased by the ABC affiliate in Washington, WJAL-TV, for a near record price for an off-net property in the market.

"It looks like it's the last really hot sitcom available for a long time," says WJLA-TV's Terry Connelly, president/ GM. "We knew we had to be aggressive to get it. These kinds of shows running on affiliate stations will change the access landscape in every market." Others say it will be a long time before affiliates dominate the sitcom business in the top 50 markets. The Fox O&Os and many of the network's affiliates already have a big head start on building up a library of sitcoms.

"Every purchase is driven by the station's need," says Jayne Adair, national sales manager for CBS O&O KDKA-TV Pittsburgh. "Sitcoms are expensive, and network affiliates don't really have the inventory for double runs or a place to put a show when it needs a rest."

Adair and others noted that the relaxation of the fin-syn rules had more of an impact on buying and selling patterns at NATPE than did the demise of PTAR.

CBS, which launched the first-run news magazine Day & Date last year as a co-venture with Group W Productions, is promising to become more active in syndication with its purchase of Maxam Entertainment, to be merged with Group W, the syndication arm of CBS's new parent, Westinghouse (see page 28).

One of this year's hottest first-run prospects, Access Hollywood, is the first fruit of a 10-year partnership NBC struck last year with New World Entertainment to produce syndicated shows. NBC also has struck lucrative deals with Warner Bros., taking financial stakes in Extra and the upcoming talk show Maureen O'Boyle in exchange for clearances on its O&Os.

The latest alliance of a major firstrun supplier, King World, and a station group, Tribune, was formally unveiled at NATPE last week (see page 26). Veteran TV observers say these types of deals have changed the rules of the syndication game, forcing producers to strike deals for guaranteed time periods rather than winning clearances on the strength of an individual show.

NATPE '96: 'A three-day rush'

Annual marketplace erupts into frenzy of buying and selling

By Cynthia Littleton

Business was brisk for major syndicators at last week's NATPE convention, but the unusually high sales volume underscored the cautious mood of buyers in an increasingly deal-driven marketplace.

Industry veterans credit the burst of activity at NATPE to the generally lackluster performance of this season's new and returning first-run shows. Many broadcasters were hesitant to make programing decisions for 1996 until the first report card on last fall's new offerings was delivered with the November books.

Syndicators also were slow to unveil new projects last year, but that didn't hinder sales to buyers with deep pockets looking to latch on to the next big programing trend.

Pent-up demand gave way to a frenzy of buying and selling on the first day of the three-day trade show in Las Vegas, where it was standing-roomonly in many booths. Multimarket deals signed by the Fox O&Os, Tribune Broadcasting and other major-market station groups fueled the sales of the shows that left the convention with more than 60% national clearance.

By the time it was all over last Thursday, even the star players in the major leagues were feeling drained from the wheeling and dealing.

"If selling was a drug, then [NATPE '96] was a three-day rush," said Scott Carlin, executive vice president, Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution.

Warner Bros.' talk/variety show with comedian Rosie O'Donnell was one of the few strips to generate strong interest from broadcasters before the convention. Rosie O'Donnell came to the convention with clearances in more than half the country and was up to 77% as of Thursday. New World Entertainment scored with Access Hollywood, cleared in 67% of the country. The entertainment-magazine strip is set to debut in access time periods in at least half the country, a feat no new first-run strip has accomplished since 1992's short-lived game show You Bet Your Life.

The strong pre-NATPE buzz on King World Productions' teen-oriented dance/magazine strip Off the Hook apparently has not translated into major clearances. King World is expected to decide the show's fate this week.

Columbia Tri-Star Television Distribution was a big winner. Just one week after announcing plans to launch an hour game show block this fall, CTTD sealed deals in 60% of the country for its Dating/Newlywed Hour block, including a crucial sale to the 12 Fox O&Os. The interest in CTTD's remakes of the campy 1970s hits The Dating Game and The Newlywed Game helped fuel other efforts to revive the game show genre as an alternative to talk shows. All American Television and Tribune Entertainment announced plans last week to jointly develop shows in the Mark Goodson Productions Library, which All American purchased last year for $50 million. The block could be ready

Adair new NATPE chairperson

NATPE International's board of directors elected Jayne Adair, national sales manager for CBS O&O KDKA-TV Pittsburgh, its 1996 chairperson.

Adair, who has been active in NATPE since 1989, credits the organization with helping her succeed in areas of the television business traditionally dominated by men.

"There weren't many role models for working women in the business when I started," Adair says. "The seminars and educational programs put on by NATPE enhanced my professional growth at all levels."

Bronfman reinventing MCA

Says company may use parent Seagram as model for TV distribution

The biggest question on the minds of investors in MCA owner Seagram Co., says Seagram CEO Edgar Bronfman Jr., is whether MCA is going to follow other major entertainment companies into a greater presence in distribution. The answer is probably yes—that will be one ingredient needed to "return MCA to the front ranks of entertainment companies," he says.

Bronfman said the top priority in the eight months since Seagram has owned MCA has been to get the best talent "working in and with MCA. Content is not king. Talent is king. The most critical shortage in our industry is talent performing talent, creative talent and, just as important, managerial talent. Talent today is totally mobile, and wherever it goes is where the best content is created." -SM for launch in the fall.

Separately, Tribune Entertainment said it will launch a slow national rollout of the dating game show Bzzz!, which debuted last week to strong ratings on the Tribune station in Los Angeles. Not surprisingly, the heat behind game shows at NATPE came at the expense of some new talk shows, in spite of the marketing of this year's new offerings as sharp, "advertiserfriendly" contrasts to shows some critics have dubbed "trash talk TV."

Citing a tough market for daytime talk shows, MCA Television on the eve of the convention dropped its effort to launch an hour talk strip, He Says, He Says. Twentieth Television cited the same reason for pulling the talker Donna Willis, M.D. from its NATPE slate earlier this month.

But there were some talk success stories at the convention. Multimedia Entertainment secured a multiyear deal for its new talk strip, Pat Bullard, with Tribune stations in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta and Boston, bringing its national clearance to roughly 62%. Warner Bros. also hit the 62% mark with its new early fringe talker, Maureen Boyle. New World Entertainment has more than 80 markets and 69% of the country waiting by the phone for its late-night call-in show, Loveline.

Multimedia's Crook & Chase, a Nashville-based morning show set to premiere Jan. 29, picked up clearances in 30 markets, including KIRO-TV Seattle and KFLA-TV Tampa. Another show being offered as a midseason replacement, World Enterprises' The Jim J. and Tammy Faye Show, boosted its national clearance from about 30% to 40%, although some stations won't pick it up until fall.

MGM Television sold its fall talk entry, The Bradshaw Difference, in 41% of the country, including 10 of the top 20 markets.

Clearances were not released for two other newcomers, Maxam Entertainment's J&I and ACI's Scoop with Sam and Dorothy, although ACI officials said the morning show was sold to Tribune's KTLA(TV) Los Angeles, WCIU-TV Chicago and KTVU(TV) San Francisco, among others. Maxam officials said they would make an announcement regarding the mother/daughter talker J&I this week.

Weekly dramas were hot sellers at the convention, driven by demand from UPN and WB Network affiliates looking for network-quality shows. Rysher Entertainment's F/X: The Series led the charge with nearly 80% clearance. New World Entertainment did good business with Stephen J. Cannell's latest drama, Two, cleared in 78% of the country.

All American's Sinbad, with eight Tribune stations and 73% coverage, beat out Keller Siegel Entertainment's Tarzan in the battle for a piece of the fantasy/adventure market carved out by MCA Television's hit Hercules: The Legendary Journeys. Tarzan was picked up by Tribune's WPIX(TV) New York as well as by stations in San Francisco, Dallas, St. Louis and Orlando, Fla. Paramount Television's The Cape is set to blast off in 66% of the country, including all of the top 25 markets. MGM Television, which brought diversity to the weekly hour market last year with the acclaimed anthology series The Outer Limits, has cleared its new drama Poltergeist: The Legacy in 72% of the country. Maxam Entertainment's pseudo-reality/sci-fi hour, Psi Factor, is a go in 73% of the country.

New reality strips coming into the market this year have gotten a boost from Twentieth Television's plans to end A Current Affair's nine-year run in September.

Paramount's Real TV has been cleared in 65% of the country, while interest in Worldvision's Hot Bench with Judge Judy Sheindlin surged to the 62% mark at the convention. MCA Television's Justice garnered 41% clearance.

Strips with questionable futures in first-run, following lukewarm response from buyers, are Telepictures Distribution's Lifeguard and MTM Television's The Beef. The sales effort for Rysher Entertainment's Strange Universe Tonight won't begin until next month.

Reality weeklies had a harder time drawing a crowd at NATPE. Tradewinds Television's Bounty Hunters is on the hunt in more than half the country. Active Entertainment's America's Dumbest Criminals got away with 44% clearance. ITC's Beach Patrol has cleared in 55% of the country.

Columbia TriStar's Mad About You climbed to 93% with a sale to six stations in the Paramount and Cox Broadcast groups, while Paramount's own Frasier closed at 85% and Carsey-Werner Distribution's Grace Under Fire topped 70%.

MTM Television's America's Funniest Home Videos edged toward the 75% benchmark, while MTM's drama Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman topped 80%.

Clearances for Buena Vista Television's sitcom Boy Meets World reached 62%. Warner Bros. Hangin' with Mr. Cooper, Living Single and Martin hovered in the 60%-70% range. Warner Bros. also began offering some 400 half-hours of the long-running PBS series This Old House at NATPE.

Sales in the off-net arena probably would have been greater if the hottest new entries had actually been up for grabs at NATPE. Warner Bros. plastered the convention site with ads for its 1998 off-net sitcom entry, Friends, but WBDTD's Carlin said the effort was in preparation for a market-by-market sales "blitzkrieg" starting next month. Twentieth Television did the same with NYPD Blue and The X-Files, which will be offered to broadcasters for weekend runs starting in fall 1997.

Broadcasters receive warnings over second channel, V-chip

They must choose between being good citizens or 'toasters with pictures,' says FCC's Ness

By Chris McConnell

Broadcasters will not be allowed to have two channels for 15 years, Commerce Department Assistant Secretary for Telecommunications and Information Larry Irving predicted Monday.

Discussing the digital channel debate at a joint NATPE/ALTV "public policy session," Irving said broadcasters face either an auction for a digital channel or an early return of the analog channel they now use. But policymakers will not allow the industry to avoid both scenarios by letting the industry keep both channels for 15 years, Irving said.

Discussing a variety of Washington topics including the V-chip and children's educational TV, Irving also recounted a conversation with one lawmaker who supports an auction of the digital channel as a response to the industry's resistance to the V-chip and other policies.

FCC Commissioner Susan Ness added that broadcasters are at a fork in the road; they must choose between being good citizens or "toasters with pictures."

"Toasters do not get mandated shelf space in the department store," Ness said, referring to must-carry rights and other privileges the industry now holds.

Ness added that broadcasters are facing a V-chip law because the industry did not voluntarily "step up to the plate" to address concerns about violence, although she also said she is not a V-chip proponent.

Irving, meanwhile, insisted that the V-chip is on its way, along with interactivity and other technical innovations.

Irving also pointed to the market for interactive educational computer software in defending the economics of children's television.

"Parents want educational software for their children," Irving said. "Don't tell me you can't find a market for children's television."

FCC Commissioner Andrew Barrett

also offered his thoughts on TV viewer demand, speculating that the public seems to want sex and violence in their programing. Answering panel moderator and NBC News chief White House correspondent Brian Williams's question of whether there will still be good programing in the future, Barrett said: "We don't have it now."

Barrett said that television carries a heavy dose of sex and violence, but he also insisted that the industry should not be expected to be "the parents of America's children."

He added that in recent weeks he has sought to reach common ground on the commission's children's TV issue with FCC Chairman Reed Hundt and the other commissioners. But he said he still opposes any quantitative standard: "We can't begin the conversation if we start from that juncture."

Panelists debate children's TV obligations

By Chris McConnell

CC Commissioner James Quello says he is ready for a vote on children's TV.

"This commissioner would like to hear from the chairman of the FCC that the full commission will be given a draft Report and Order in the children's television proceeding to consider and vote on in the near future," Quello told broadcasters Sunday at the Association of Independent Television Stations convention in Las Vegas. (The association has rechristened itself the Association of Local Television Stations.)

"In my view, the comments are in, the record is ripe for decision and nothing more of any substantive value is to be gained by the continued expenditure of rhetorical capital on the issue," Quello said.

The call for a vote follows a similar request issued earlier by NAB President Eddie Fritts. In a speech last year, Fritts said FCC Chairman Reed Hundt's office had asked broadcasters to request a postponement of the proceeding and called for the chairman to bring the item up for a vote.

Quello issued his call for a vote while posing a series of questions on children's television to other panelists participating in a session titled "Big Brother Is Watching You, but Are the Kids?" Quello asked how much educational programing children watch and how much education they derive from the shows.

"And in the grand scheme of things, how does educational TV add to the lives of children living in poverty and violence without adequate food, clothing and shelter?" Quello asked.

But commissioners Susan Ness and Andrew Barrett did not join Quello's effort to put the issue to a vote. Ness said the item is not yet ready for final consideration. Barrett said the timing of the vote is up to Hundt: "That's Reed Hundt's role as chairman."

Media Access Project Deputy Director Gigi Sohn responded that no one is asking television to solve such problems, but rather to serve its public interest obligations.

New telcom bill, budget cuts put pressure on FCC

Leach says Congress could pass telcom bill by end of February.

Stewart says budget crunch could slow FCC processing of station applications.

Lawmakers could consider the telecommunications bill during the third week of February if current scheduling holds, House Commerce Committee staffer David Leach said yesterday.

Discussing the bill at a "Policy Power Breakfast" of the Association of Independent Television Stations convention, Leach predicted that House-Senate conference committee members might file their report on the bill as early as this week. But he also cautioned that the conference report is still not a done deal.

"The thing is always open until the final papers are filed," Leach said. Jessica Wallace of Representative Cliff Stearns's (R-Fla.) office added that her boss is concerned that the bill's TV duopoly provisions have been too watered down from those approved by the House.

"We wanted it to be much more aggressive," Wallace said.

The Capitol Hill representatives offered their forecasts on the legislation as FCC representatives worried about their ability to implement it once Congress wraps up its work. Mass Media Bureau Chief Roy Stewart said 75% of the commission's budget goes to staffing, and he predicted that current budget cutbacks will force his bureau to choose between implementing the bill and maintaining its current duties in processing various broadcast applications.

The commission is slated to receive $166 million for fiscal 1996, $19 million less than the $185 million Congress gave the FCC last year. FCC Chairman Reed Hundt last week called the commission a victim of a "budgetary drive-by shooting" and said he will be pressing lawmakers to boost the FCC's budget.

One result of the commission's budget, Stewart said, is that "I'm not going to be able to grant your facilities change applications." He also cited the possibility of unregulated broadcasters clustering around large cities and interfering with each other.

Wallace offered some sympathy to those with the complaints, agreeing that it will be difficult to streamline the commission while giving it new responsibilities. And Stewart added: "The potential is there to do some damage to the broadcast service."

Stewart also raised concerns about the pending proceeding on children's television, maintaining that his bureau will need a policy on children's educational TV to follow when it begins reviewing TV license renewal applications this summer: "What are we going to do?"

Lisa Smith of Commissioner Andrew Barrett's office answered, saying that the commission can follow the procedures it has used in the past to process renewal applications. Pete Belvin of Commissioner James Quello's office added that the commissioners should start looking for common ground on the contentious issue so that they can move on to new problems.

Julius Genachowski of Hundt's office cited a series of new issues such as compatibility between broadcast signals and set-top boxes—that broadcasters will face as the video marketplace changes. He said the commission should open more of a dialogue with the industry to address such matters: "I think we're just scratching the surface of problems broadcasters are going to face," Genachowski said. —CM cerned with how many children watch the shows than how much programing is aired. Sachs Finley & Co. President Jerry Sachs worried that children's programs are not attracting the audience that advertisers need.

Saatchi & Saatchi North America's Allen Banks agreed that shows labeled "educational" get slotted into the early morning hours. But he also stressed the need for alluring shows, suggesting that broadcasters can meet their statutory obligations with shows that do not necessarily focus on classroom skills.

Sohn said that allowing broadcasters too loose a definition of "educational" programing allows them to claim the likes of The Jetsons as educational.

Panel moderator and WPHL-TV Philadelphia Vice President/General Manager Randy Smith agreed that The Jetsons is not educational, but added that the show is still good children's TV. Banks pointed to the educational fare offered on PBS and asked why other broadcasters cannot satisfy their obligations with children's entertainment programing.

Sohn responded that the programing on PBS does not relieve other broadcasters of their educational TV obligations. "You and PBS get your spectrum for free," Sohn said.

The FCC will need to figure out how to apply the Children's Television Act (CTA) before it begins addressing broadcast license renewals this summer, FCC Chairman Reed Hundt told the NATPE convention last week.

Addressing a children's TV panel discussion via a videotaped message, Hundt asked how the FCC should certify CTA compliance and added that broadcasters would comply with the law if they had a clear standard on children's educational programing.

"Broadcasters are the most lawabiding, God-fearing, respectable businessmen in this country," Hundt said. "Wouldn't it be good if we told you clearly what was expected if it was a reasonable minimum?"

Broadcast representatives on the panel did not think so.

"I don't think my role as a broadcaster is to educate children," Qwest Broadcasting Senior Vice President of Operations Madelyn Bonnot said. Bonnot also maintained that broadcasters provide other services—such as public service announcements and various outreach programs—that afford more effective public service than math or science programing. "They're getting that damn stuff in school," Bonnot said. She also stressed that the educational fare must be compelling to succeed "if it's 6 a.m."

Marjorie Kalins of Children's Television Workshop (CTW) insisted that educational programing can succeed with viewers. "I wish we all were not so afraid of the concept of educational programing," said Kalins, CTW's senior vice president of programing and production.

CBS's Judy Price was not convinced of the programing's market value. Price, vice president of children's programs and daytime specials at CBS, said her network does not make money on Beakman's World. "Most of the educational fare that we do doesn't carry its weight," Price said.

But Westinghouse/CBS Chief Counsel Stephen Hildenbrandt added that if the network does not make money on educational TV, it will provide the programing anyway. Hildenbrandt pointed to demands in Washington that broadcasters pay for their ability to distribute programing.

Nickelodeon Network & U.S. Television Executive Vice President Herb Scannell stressed the importance of scheduling and pointed to his company's decision to place Nick News on Sundays at 8 p.m. "We did that because we [think] that's part of what our job is," Scannell said. He also encouraged the industry to buck programing trends.

"If you want to support an industry, get behind some ideas that are different," Scannell said.

INTV/ALTV: What's in a name

With only a handful of "pure" independents still on its membership rolls, the Association of Independent Television Stations voted to change its name to the Association of Local Television Stations—ALTV.

In announcing the name change at its annual meeting in Las Vegas Monday, the association showed a logo but said it is a work in progress. It said it also is awaiting trademark clearances.

The association was founded more than two decades ago to represent the interests of independents—stations unaffiliated with ABC, CBS or NBC. But now it comprises mostly stations that have signed with one of the newer networks—Fox, UPN and the WB Network. In fact, the group had considered calling itself the Emerging Network Television Association.

The name change was prompted by the results of a member survey in which 73% said the old name was "totally outdated."

Despite the new all-inclusive moniker, the ALTV does not intend to court affiliates of the Big Three. According to the survey, 75.6% of ALTV's members disagree with opening the association to ABC, CBS and NBC affiliates.

The survey—conducted by an outside firm, The Eagle Group—found the members generally were pleased with the association. Almost twothirds (62.2%) said there was "nothing" they disliked about the group; 46.7% considered it "very valuable," and another 40% said it was "somewhat valuable."

ALTV board member Kevin O'Brien, VP/GM of KTVU-TV San Francisco, also announced that the association will move its annual Washington lobbying rally—rated "excellent" or "good" by 84% of the survey respondents—from summer to late spring or early fall. "I think we are going to triple our attendance this year," he said.

Satellite rules streamlined

Approval not needed for international, domestic crossovers

By Christopher Stern

nternational and domestic satellite services, including direct broadcast satellite services, no longer need the FCC's approval to get into each other's businesses, according to new rules issued by the commission last week.

"Two different schemes no longer makes sense for international and domestic satellites," said International Bureau Chief Scott Harris.

Domestic satellites may now offer international services without FCC approval, and international satellites may offer services in the U.S.

Industry observers say the rules are good news for the largest satellite companies, including Hughes Communications, AT&T and GE Americom. Those companies, which control a vast majority of the domestic satellite slots, will now have an easier time branching into the international arena.

"We are delighted," said a Hughes spokesperson. "This deregulation sweeps down barriers and recognizes [that] the world is becoming a smaller place. It is exactly the kind of leadership we need from the FCC."

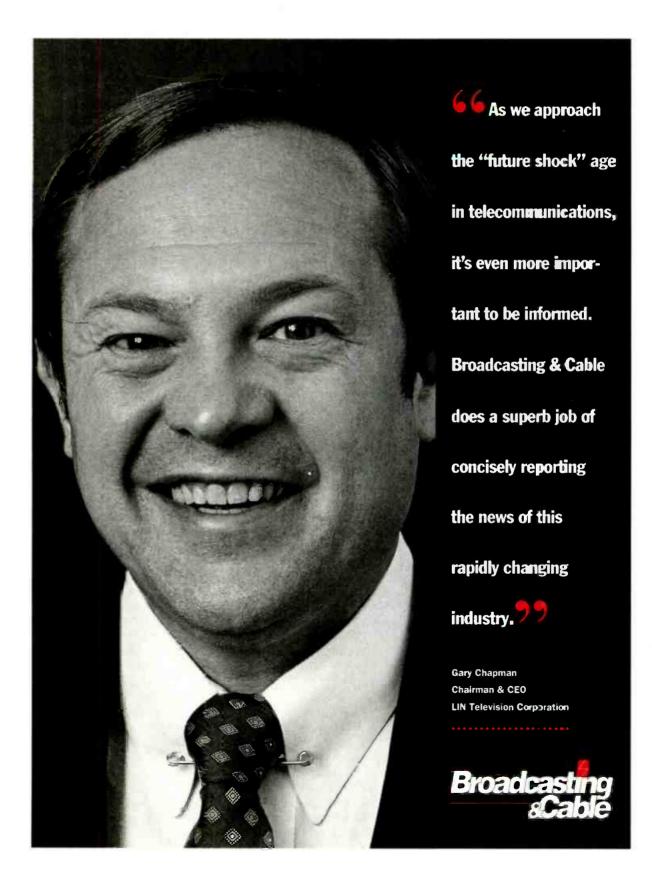

But smaller companies were not as enthusiastic. PanAmSat Washington attorney Henry Goldberg said the larger companies have locked up the domestic satellite slots, leaving little room for expansion in the U.S. market.

"Technically, it opens both sides of the business, but practically, it opens only part of the system," Goldberg said.

Under the new rules, satellite companies must demonstrate that they have full financing before the FCC will grant them a license. These stricter financial requirements "may have a tendency to drive out start-ups and entrepreneurs," Goldberg said.

The decision has the potential to open large markets to DIRECTV, USSB and other DBS services. Although the companies no longer need the FCC's approval to offer services outside the U.S., they still need approval from foreign governments before setting up shop in other countries.

S luggish pre-NATPE sales of new first-run shows gave way Tuesday to a frenzy of buying and selling as several syndicators did brisk business on some hot prospects for fall.

Columbia TriStar Television Distribution kicked off the three-day show with a bang, announcing in the early afternoon that it had sold its game show block, The Dating/Newlywed Hour, to the Fox O&Os.

"This is the first show we've ever purchased for all 12 of our stations." said Mitch Stern, president and COO of Fox Television Stations. "We believe the [block] is a strong vehicle, and we are excited about its potential to reach a broad audience."

The hour block, sold for cash plus barter, comprises the campy 1970s Chuck Barris hits The Dating Game and The Newlywed Game. The Fox stations are expected to run the shows in daytime and early fringe.

The sale to the Fox O&Os, which cover about 26% of the country, makes The Dating/Newlywed Hour a firm go for a fall launch and signals the start of the much-talked-about revival of the game show genre.

"Game shows are returning as the next big programing genre," said Barry Thurston, president of CTTD.

Like most other new first-run offerings, game shows are being pitched as an "advertiser-friendly" alternative to talk shows this year.

By the end of the convention, All American Television was expected to announce plans to launch an hour game show block.

All American executives spent much of their time Tuesday surveying broadcasters on which shows in the vast Mark Goodson Productions library have the best shot at success in the 1990s. All American purchased the Goodson archives of dozens of game shows for $50 million last year.

Likely candidates for All American's block include the 1950s and '60s clas-

Another show that got off to a roaring start in the first hours of wheeling and dealing was King World Productions' youth-oriented magazine strip Off the Hook. By late Tuesday afternoon, the show was cleared in 60% of the country, thanks in part to a larger pact King World struck with Tribune Broadcasting (see story, page 26).

Off the Hook was picked up by Tribune stations in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and San Diego and by Disney-owned KCAL-TV Los Angeles. Those deals were in the works before the show opened, but about 40% of the business for Off the Hook was done in the first three hours of the show.

"This is the busiest I've ever been at NATPE." said Bob Jacobs, president of domestic distribution for King World. "And we're not just taking any time periods. Every deal we've cut has been for specific [early fringe] slots."

Tribune stations in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta and Boston also signed on Tuesday for Multimedia Entertainment's new talk strip Pat Bullard, bringing the show's national clearance level to about 40%. With Warner Bros.' Rosie O'Donnell and Maureen O'Boyle, Pat Bullard may be one of the few new talk shows to launch in the fall.

Warner Bros. officials said that sales of Rosie O'Donnell and Maureen O'Boyle, both of which came to NATPE with more than 50% coverage, were fast and furious Tuesday, although updated clearance figures were not available by press time.

New World Entertainment reported that broadcasters were showing strong interest in Access Hollywood, the entertainment-magazine strip in the works from New World Entertainment and NBC. The show is cleared in 65% of the country, with half of the clearances in access time periods.

King World's efforts to promote 'Off the Hook' at NATPE included a fleet of hot-air balloons.

On the action-hour front, MTM Entertainment on Tuesday picked up more than one dozen new stations for The Cape, putting the show's total clearance thus far at about 60%.

Rysher Entertainment's F/X: The

'The Dating Game

Series, which came to NATPE with nearly 70% clearance, was on track to reach the 85% benchmark by close of business Thursday. Rysher officials said. The show has generated strong interest from UPN and WB Network affiliates looking for big-budget firstrun shows compatible with the youngmale orientation of the start-up networks' programing.

In the reality arena, Worldvision Enterprises found buyers for Hot Bench with Judge Judy Sheindlin in more than 16 markets Tuesday, giving it about 30% national clearance. MCA Television also picked up major market deals for its legal-oriented halfhour reality strip. Justice, including Chris Craft-owned stations in New York and Los Angeles.

'He Says, She Says' first to founder

MCA's last word on proposed talk strip: No go for fall

By Cynthia Littleton

Facing up to the reality of a tight first-run market on the eve of NATPE, MCA Television has decided not to launch its new talk show, He Says, She Says, this fall.

The hour strip was one of two new first-run projects MCA had planned to pitch to broadcasters at NATPE last week.

MCA officials say the decision on He Says, She Says was prompted by a shortage of desirable daytime time slots and broadcasters' general apathy toward new talk shows this year.

"The stakes are too high, and nobody's looking for new talk shows this year," says Shelly Schwab, president of MCA Television. "The only way to launch a new show is to get good stations to put it in A-plus time periods. We're not going to accept the time periods made available by [this season's] canceled shows. All that does is guarantee failure."

Sources say the studio was quick to kill He Says. She Says to make sure that Greg Meidel, the newly installed chairman of the MCA Television Group, would not be associated with a show that probably wouldn't launch in the fall. MCA hired Meidel away from Fox's Twentieth Television last fall as part of an effort to revitalize its TV division. The prospects for MCA's other new first-run project, the courtroom reality strip Justice, are much brighter, Schwab says. MCA has received offers for Justice in the top five markets.

Schwab says the contrast in broadcasters' interest in a new reality strip versus a new talk strip has been sharp and somewhat surprising.

"We're seeing much more action on Justice," says Schwab. "We're very encouraged by the offers we've been getting. It tells us the timing on He Says, She Says just wasn't right this year."

He Says, She Says was marketed as a new twist on the traditional talk format, with co-hosts Wendy Walsh and Mark Thompson debating topical issues from male and female perspectives. Not surprisingly, scheduled NATPE appearances by Thompson and Walsh were canceled.

Station reps and other TV pundits had picked He Says, She Says as a promising prospect among 1996's crop of talk shows. But Schwab and others say broadcasters are approaching new talk shows with extreme caution this year after watching a string of failed talk shows come and go over the past two years.

The demise of "He Says. She Says" may be a bad omen for other talk shows that headed into NATPE without significant clearances.

a Rosie in the money: According to a source, comedian Rosie O'Donnell, host of Warner Bros.' new talk show, will be laughing all the way to the bank. The deal calls for her to be paid $5 million for year one and as much as $20 million over five years for the show.

• 'Friends' in high places: Friends has a new friend in Washington: wJLA-TV, which has scooped up off-network rights to the hit NBC sitcom. Allbritton-owned wJLA-TV reportedly paid a record price for an off-network sitcom in the market, second only to Cosby, beating out bids from Fox- and Paramount-owned stations. The sale to wJLA-TV puts Friends national clearance level at close to 35%, an unprecedented achievement for a second-year sitcom that won't bow in syndication until fall '98. In spite of the buzz surrounding Friends, Warner Bros. officials say the show will not be a major focus of its efforts at NATPE. "We're planning to roll out a very specific, market-by-market blitzkrieg on the show" starting in late February, says Scott Carlin, executive VP of Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution. —CL

King World gets Tribune's 'Geraldo'

Tribune, KWP officially announce joint first-run development pact

By Steve McClellan

Kivera signed an agreement last week that transfers distribution rights to the nine-year Geraldo! talk show from Tribune to KWP.

The show will be relaunched next season as the Geraldo Rivera Show, and Rivera already has embraced a new "viewers' bill of rights," a commitment to clean up the show's act in the face of escalating criticism from special interest groups, viewers and station managers.

The deal also calls for Tribune and KWP to jointly develop first-run programing projects. That does not include KWP's new dance and music information show, Off the Hook, although Tribune has picked up the show in at least four of its markets—New York, Boston, Philadelphia and San Diego (see story, page 24).

Rivera, who had two and a half seasons remaining on his contract with Tribune, has extended that by one more, which will take him through at least 1998-99. KWP has additional options that could take Geraldo several seasons beyond that.

Tribune will continue to handle barter advertising sales for Geraldo, and the company will share barter responsibilities with KWP on future jointly developed shows. KWP will sell the show to stations, and Tribune will commit station time periods covering 26% of the country.

Geraldo is cleared in about 84% of the country, mostly in daytime time periods, and one of KWP's key objectives will be to get the show upgraded to early fringe (late afternoon) time slots. "The first year will be very tough," said KWP President Michael King. He cited station commitments to other shows, as well as the need to get the word out about the "new" Geraldo.

At a press conference last Tuesday, Rivera said his bill of rights should satisfy critics, including William Bennett "if he is an honorable and honest man, and is not simply exploiting the issue for political gain.

The addition of Geraldo to KWP gives the syndicator the two oldest talk shows on the air, now that Phil Donahue has announced that he'll retire at the end of the season.

The third talk show in the KWP corral is Rolonda, which also had been criticized for taking the low road in some segments. "She wanted to do that, but we wouldn't let her," said KWP Chairman Roger King.

Meanwhile, KWP steered clear of confirming Rolonda as a definite renewal for next season. "We hope so," said Roger King.

Programing alliances are changing the way business is being conducted at NATPE. Discussing the issue (I-r): Warner Bros.' Dick Robertson; Paramount's Tony Cassara; William Morris's Mark Itkin; Rysher's Keith Samples; producer Danny Jacobson, and New World's Brandon Tartikoff.

It's the mergers, stupid

Alliances increasingly shape syndication business

By Steve McClellan

The rules of the syndication programing game have changed dramatically in the past year and a half. Content may still be king, but strategic alliances between powerful media companies determine more than ever what shows will make it to air.

That thesis was discussed at length during an INTV session, "It's the Programing, Stupid," moderated by New World Entertainment Chairman Brandon Tartikoff.

The catalyst for the changes was the Fox/New World alliance, said Tartikoff, which caused a lot of ripple effects in the industry. "Other things happened rapidly right after that. There were consolidations, mergers, affiliation switches. Basically, the rules of the game have shifted."

And it's not just the little players that are getting squeezed in the new era of alliances—a fact that was reinforced at the panel session by Dick Robertson, president, Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution.

An alliance between New World and NBC earlier this year to create a new access magazine, Access Hollywood, almost killed WBDTD's second-season magazine, Extra. "It was the worst news I had [had] in 15 years in the business," Robertson recalled, when he got a call from NBC last year saying it was canceling the show to form an alliance with New World on a similar magazine.

That was after Warner had spent $50 million launching Extra in its first season with the NBC-owned stations as key affiliates. "It was very successful, life couldn't be better, and then we were told it was over," said Robertson. The upshot: To get NBC to stay with the show, Warner had to give an equity stake and also agree to change the format so that it did not compete head to head in entertainment news. "It was a tough pill to swallow, but we made a deal to save the show. The rules change, and we have to live with them even if it's less profitable for us."

Tony Cassara, president of the Paramount station group, said that six companies that own stations in New York and Los Angeles are the "gatekeepers" in syndication programing. "It's a power they have, and they will use it. That's the way of the world," he said.

Alliances aside, there is still room for independents to thrive, said Rysher's Keith Samples, who got his start as an independent selling NBC's Saved by the Bell. "It's harder because of the alliances" and the new networks WB and UPN, he said. "There is still room for people to take a chance and work hard."

Paxson's inTV expands presence

Affiliates recognize power of infomercials

Paxson Communications' *in*TV (Infomall Television Network) continues to expand rapidly into major TV markets around the country, with stations now broadcasting in 17 of the top 50 markets, including 10 of the top 20 markets.

*in*TV's format is simple. *in*TV stations provide infomercial programmers and producers valuable primetime air time - dayparts that have been denied by traditional broadcast stations. It's these high viewing periods that mean better show performance and increased payouts to broadcasters. Aggressive property acquisition tactics and tremendous affiliate station interest are fueling the network's rapid growth. *in*TV now serves 22 million homes by cable nationwide and is growing every day.

Paxson's strategy of acquiring stations, reprogramming existing formats into profitable paid programming and providing primetime media time has captivated the infomercial industry's attention. 200 total 4th quarter advertisers include Time Warner Entertainment, Paramount, RCA, Westinghouse Securities, DSS DirectTV, Mattel plus many more.

*in*TV is now one of the fastest growing broadcast networks in the country.

Lund outlines likely structure of CBS/Maxam/Group W

Deal isn't done yet, but CBS president says network's return to domestic syndication will be major force in business

By Steve McClellan

The deal still isn't closed, but CBS has an agreement in principle to acquire Maxam Entertainment from Belo Broadcasting and Maxam President Ed Wilson. Maxam will merge with Group W Productions and CBS Enterprises to form a program distribution arm that will syndicate shows worldwide. Wilson will run the new company, which will be based in Los Angeles.

Bob Cook, Wilson's number two at Maxam, will have essentially the same role at the new company, where he will serve as executive vice president.

CBS Inc. President Peter Lund says the company expects that its new syndication unit—as yet unnamed—will be a major force in the business, both domestically and internationally, as well as in the home video arena and in licensing and merchandising.

Lund also says that the deal is tied to renewing Belo's affiliate agreements with CBS: "With the sunset of the financial interest and syndication rules, we want to be ready to act aggressively to compete in syndication both here in the United States and internationally," says Lund. "This step we're taking does exactly that."

Under the terms of the deal, Belo will have the option to take an equity stake in any first-run program (but not off-network shows like Dave's World, Touched by an Angel and Caroline in the City) the CBS/Maxam/Group W entity launches in the next three years, adding its 8.3% station coverage to CBS's 32% station group coverage.

The company says Group W Productions President Derk Zimmerman, "will continue to support CBS's syndication efforts reporting to Wilson." Adds Lund: "We are pleased that Derk will add his talents and his class as an individual to our new enterprise."

Many organizational questions remain unanswered. For the time being, however, the Group W and CBS international units will remain separate, with Group W International head CBS's syndication expansion plans were spelled out January 22 by (I-r) Bob Cook, Peter Lund and Ed Wilson.

Catherine Malatesta continuing to report to Zimmerman, while CBS Enterprises President Rainer Siek will report to Wilson.

On the NATPE exhibit floor, the company had both the Group W and Maxam booths. The Maxam booth housed the international, barter sales and CBS affiliate relations staffs. The Group W booth showcased all the domestic syndication programs, including Day & Date, J&I, Psi-Factor, Martha Stewart and Bob Vila's Home Again.

A key priority is stengthening the position of Day & Date, which has been critically well received but is not doing well in many markets.

he issue of a ratings system for all TV network programs as part of the V-chip element of the telecommunications bill will wind up in court before it's implemented by the networks, predicted Warren Littlefield, president, NBC Entertainment.

The NBC programing chief made his remarks last Tuesday at the NATPE opening general session, which featured the seven broadcast network programing heads.

Characterizing the establishment of a ratings system as Orwellian and "just wrong," Littlefield said "it will

The networks "will end up in court before you see us rating shows."

NBC's Warren Littlefield

end up in court before you see us on this panel rating shows." As an alternative, Littlefield suggested that all television stations adopt the same broadcast standards as the networks. If stations did so, "gratuitous violence on [broadcast] television would cease to exist."

Ted Harbert, president, ABC

Entertainment, said his network has done "zero work" on starting to devise a ratings system. Leslie Moonves, president. CBS Entertainment, noted that many politicians have made violence on television a cause celebre to their constituents and therefore are determined to push for a ratings system. Michael Sullivan, UPN president, suggested that implementation of a ratings system would prohibit many classic movies from being shown on broadcast television. He cited "The Godfather" as an example.

When asked if public television has become irrelevant with the growth of such cable services as Discovery Channel and The History Channel, Kathy Quattrone, PBS president, said public television "is still quite different from other services. Additionally, we have universal reach through our local stations. We heard a real affirmation last year [during calls to end PBS funding] from people who let it be known that public television should be part of their lives."

All of the network programing chiefs agreed that PBS should continue as a part of the broadcast universe. Some suggested that if PBS funding is cut, the network should be able to air commercials. "If Congress is stupid enough to pull funding from PBS, [it] should be able to do anything—including commercials—[to recoup that money]," said Moonves.

The panel also agreed network television still is a healthy business, but most said that limiting program appeal to one demographic group would be detrimental to the business. Ironically, Harbert of ABC, whose network was first to target its shows to the 18-49year-old viewers without regard for household numbers, was the first to put forth that view. "If the networks continue to broadcast to a narrowly defined audience, like just the 18-49year-olds, then there's limited potential. But if you have a broad-based schedule, all the networks can survive."

As for the survival of the two new networks, executives from both suggested why their ventures will survive. "From a spectrum standpoint, there's only room for five [networks to survive]," said Garth Ancier, head of programing for the WB Network, suggesting that his would be one of the five. "It's a bit easier when you've done it before," he said, referring to his tenure and that of The WB's head, Jamie Kellner, at Fox during its birth.

As to why UPN has the advantage for survival, Sullivan said, "We have the better station lineup and a broaderbased schedule. And we have a staff of people that have done it before."

Doug Binzak, Fox senior VP, scheduling, who sat in for John Matoian, president of Fox Entertainment, said the network has benefited from showing patience in its programing. He cited as an example Party of Five, which suffered from low ratings in its first season last year but recently has seen its numbers rise; recently it was voted outstanding drama at the Golden Globe Awards.

t a meeting in Las Vegas over the weekend (Jan. 20-21), CBS affiliates unanimously agreed to commit airtime to editorialize and to run spots in an NAB-led consumer awareness campaign to defeat Senator Bob Dole's initiative to force broadcasters to pay for spectrum.

Other news from the two-day CBS affiliates meeting on the eve of NATPE: 60 Minutes will produce year-round after years of taking a summer hiatus. It is gearing up to meet a new head-to-head challenge from Dateline NBC, which will add a fourth night opposite 60 Minutes at 7 p.m. Sunday next fall. In addition, 60 Minutes plans to be more topical than is the current format.

more prime time specials, including one on the New Hampshire primary that will air in February. Affiliate sources say changes will be coming soon to CBS This Morning, the beleaguered morning news show. The changes are not yet complete, but sources say they likely will involve greater input in the show by the affiliates.

The meeting was different from most other CBS affiliate meetings during the past several years—there was nary a complaining or quarrelsome station manager in sight.

That's surprising, given the current status of the network, which is a distant third in prime time (fourth in some key demographics) and third in the early morning and evening news.

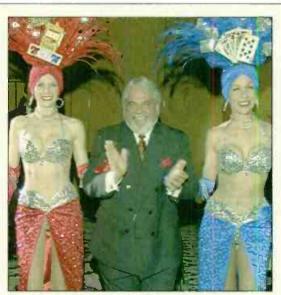

But it also speaks volumes about the affiliates' feelings toward new CBS

CBS's news division also is planning

CBS send-off

Tony Malara and CBS parted company with a bang Sunday night at a standingroom-only roast at the Mirage Hotel. The longtime network executive, most recently president, affiliate relations, entered the ballroom with typical flamboyance, with a Las Vegas showairl on each arm. The emcee was Peter Lund, president of CBS Inc., who started the bittersweet evening by saying: "I assure you, this is a celebration."

Phil Jones of Meredith Corp., Des Moines, Iowa, a

former CBS affiliates chief and now chairman of the National Association of Broadcasters, had perhaps the night's best line when he recalled how Malara had advised Larry Tisch: "Go ahead, Larry, reduce the compensation. Where are [the affiliates] going to go?" Jones's next best line: how Malara advised Eric Ober, former CBS News chief, to pair Connie Chung with Dan Rather. The evening's highlight was a tape review of the Malara career, from Watertown, N.Y., to his network eminence, narrated by Mike Wallace in 60 Minutes style.

Among the showstoppers: an appearance by Toby Malara, the honoree's son and an about-to-be lawyer, and a satirical number by Taxi and Evening Shade star Marilu Henner. Malara, who ends his 17-year association with CBS this month, said, "This is not the end of anything.... We will all meet again.... I just hope the next gig will have more laughs than the last three years.... As we say in the business, stay tuned."

owner Westinghouse Electric's initial moves to get things back on track, including selling recent acquisitions to reduce debt, putting Peter Lund in charge of CBS and guaranteeing him the resources needed to do the job.

Much of the meeting was aimed at rallying the troops, and Westinghouse Chairman Michael Jordan led the cheering with a Sunday luncheon address that inspired the rank-and-file station managers. "It was great to hear from the top man that the plan is to be number one again and that he'll commit the resources to getting the job done," said one affiliate. "There is a sense that we can and will come back."

Indeed, affiliates see Westinghouse as the great liberator—"they've taken the handcuffs off" as one affiliate put it—from investor Larry Tisch, whom affiliates still love to beat up on, figuratively. "He's the reason we're in this fix," groused one affiliate, who believes the network will see better days under the new owners. "That, and really bad programing."

"The energy at this meeting was incredible," said Ralph Gabbard, chairman of the CBS affiliate advisory board, who has never been shy about criticizing the network. "I've been cynical about the past management, but I really believe these guys have the resources and talent to get the job done."

"The biggest issue is spectrum," said Gabbard. "We're going to rock the boat and get the message to the public about what they'll be losing" if spectrum auctions take place.

CBS Sports President Dave Kenin said the division was committed to getting back the rights to the "crown jewels" of sports programing, such as the NFL. CBS also is talking to a group headed by New York businessman Howard Milstein that wants to create a football league to compete with the NFL.

Fox pushes news, blasts Nielsen

Network tells affiliates it expects a news commitment from them; threatens legal action if ratings don't improve

By Steve Coe

ox heaped praise, money and some not-so-subtle advice on its affiliates during the network's winter affiliates meeting Sunday (Jan. 21) in Las Vegas.

The money came by way of Margaret Loesch, president, Fox Children's Network, who passed out some $15 million as part of the network's cooperative with stations for its kids programing.

Mixed with the upbeat and congratulatory tone of the meeting—for Fox's ratings performance and sports acquisitions—was the message that Fox officials expect stations to step up just as they say the network has done.

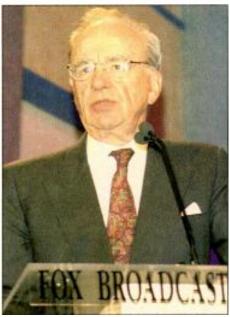

"We need your commitment to take the necessary steps to be leaders in your respective markets by investing in news, strong off-network shows and aggressive marketing and promotion campaigns," said Chase Carey, chairman/ CEO, Fox Television. "We're starting to make some measurable progress in certain affiliate markets...and the potential is there for each of you to win in your markets, but for many of you it requires that you deal with your specific shortcomings aggressively and soon."

Despite the network's start-and-stop track record regarding news, Fox said that it intends to have a news presence in each market by any means necessary. Joe Peyronnin, Fox News president, said that if an affiliate does not have a news service, the network will look to other stations in the market to set up a news cooperative. However, he didn't say that the network would look to change affiliations for lack of news.

Repeating an oft-heard theme at Fox meetings, Carey blasted Nielsen and took the network's position a step further by saying that Fox will consider any avenues available, including legal options, to force the ratings company to change the way it measures viewership: "We must deal with one of our industry's real failures: the Nielsen rating service. Put quite simply, the service Nielsen is providing to you as stations and us as a network is unprofessional and unacceptable." He cited several examples from the November ratings book to illustrate his complaints, including the numbers for an NBC NFL game in Greenville, N.C., that Nielsen said scored a 13 household rating and an 89 rating among adults 18-34. "The ratings book was so fraught with errors that they had to pull it back and publish an entirely new book.

"Like it or not, Nielsen has a fiduciary responsibility to provide a professional service, and we will go to war if we have to," he said. "I have instructed our legal counsel to pursue any legal recourse necessary against Nielsen to get them to perform." He added that Fox would work with the other networks in looking at alternatives to Nielsen. To heavy applause, he said: "Nielsen is the only organization I've ever dealt with that makes our federal government look like a smooth and responsive operation."

Preston Padden, president, network distribution, Fox Broadcasting Co., also told affiliates that the network has decided to negotiate retransmission consent deals only for the Fox owned-and-operated stations rather than seek a collective bargaining deal that would include all of its affiliates. "Each Fox affiliate will be free to use the strength of Fox programing to engage in its own negotiations and make its own deal subject only to two limitations," he said.

Padden said stations will follow the "home market station goes first" policy, which gives affiliates exclusive retransmission rights within their DMA to make those deals first. "Of course you will also be free to negotiate retransmission agreements...outside of your DMA after the home market Fox affiliate in that DMA has concluded its negotiations." He also said that affiliate deals must expire on May 31, 1999, "the same end date in our existing collective bargaining arrangements with the cable MSOs."

Rupert Murdoch, News Corp. chairman/CEO, kicked off the gathering by saying that "anyone who cares about free over-the-air television and the American viewers who rely on free television must champion our need to make the transition to digital so that we can stay competitive with the various pay television media." He noted that satellite competitors like Primestar, Hughes and Hubbard "have all begun satellite broadcasting in digital, and later this year, cable and telephone industries will begin deployment of digital television systems."

Elkin looking to buy back TV stations

By Elizabeth Rathbun

ason Elkin, who sold his eight New Vision Television stations to Bert Ellis in November 1994, reportedly will make a run at buying them back.

Ellis has said he is exploring his options for Ellis Communications Inc., which may include selling its 15 TV and two radio stations (BROADCASTING & CABLE, Jan. 22). Of the 15 TVs, he bought eight from Elkin for $230 million, more than twice what Elkin paid for the group in 1993. The stations are KOLD-TV Tucson, Ariz.; wSAV-TV Savannah, Ga.; wJTV-TV Jackson and wHLT-TV Hattiesburg, Miss.; wECT-TV Wilmington, N.C.; KSFY-TV Sioux Falls, S.D., and two satellite stations in South Dakota.

After selling the stations to Ellis in November 1994, Elkin said the resulting company, New Vision Television II, intended to own "no more than three" network affiliates in markets 25-50.

But Elkin finalized no deals for new TV stations until last week during the

Changing Hands

NATPE convention in Las Vegas, sources say. Elkin then bought Fox affiliate wFXP(TV) (formerly wETG) Erie, Pa. (ch. 66), for $5 million (see "Changing Hands") from Erie Broadcasting Inc., sources say.

Elkin intended to buy a second station in Erie, NBC affiliate WICU-TV (ch. 12), for $11 million plus stock from Lamb Enterprises, sources say. The station would have created a UHF-VHF duopoly in Erie, but that deal apparently has been derailed by Congress's failure to agree on a telecommunications bill. The House version of the bill would allow such duopolies.

So Elkin has arranged to immediately resell wiCU-TV to an unnamed station-acquisition company for $13.9 million, sources say.

Also at NATPÉ, Elkin reportedly was meeting with investment bankers in a search for funding to make a bid for his former New Vision stations. Elkin declined comment on the specifics, but says he plans to have 12 TV station deals closed or under contract by the end of the year.

GM wins station from Christian Network

A federal judge has blocked the $2.5 million sale of WHKE(TV) ch. 55 Kenosha/Milwaukee, Wis., to Lowell Paxson-backed Christian Network.

District Court Judge Myron L. Gordon on Jan. 10 ruled that the network and would-be seller LeSea Broadcasting Inc. had crafted a purchase agreement that circumvented station general manager John R. Miller's right of first refusal for WHKE. Gordon "permanently enjoined [LeSea] from consummating the sale" and ordered that the station be sold to Miller.

"It's the classic story of David versus Goliath, and once again David prevailed," Miller told the Kenosha News.

LeSea was given 30 days to appeal the ruling.

Telcom delay casts chill over station deals

But it's business as usual for aggressive buyers

Radio

By Donna Petrozzello

s broadcasters and industry analysts await action on the telecommunications-reform bill, radio station brokers say the delay has stifled dealmaking.

"There is a lot of talking, but nothing is happening," says broker Michael Bergner of Bergner & Co. "There are a lot of deals in limbo. Those people selling stations don't want to move prematurely."

"If you are doing any deals related to deregulation, things are on hold," says station broker Gary Stevens.

The bill, now being considered by a congressional conference committee, would liberalize radio ownership rules by allowing groups to own up to eight stations in a market of at least 45 commercial stations, but no more than five stations on a single band. In markets of 30-44 stations, a group could own up to seven stations, with a maximum four on a single band.

In smaller markets of 15-29 commercial stations, a group could own a total six stations, with only four on a single band. And in the smallest markets with fewer than 15 stations, a group could own five stations, with a maximum three on a single band, provided that no single company owns more than half of the market's signals.

Debate by FCC commissioners and the ongoing concerns of Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.) over the allocation of digital spectrum have slowed the voting process and, consequently, station trading.

"[The defay] has put a chill on the whole process," says Media Venture Partners' broker Charles Giddens. He says the debate that has followed Dole's remark that broadcasters should pay for digital spectrum "has thrown a damp blanket over things.

However, Giddens and some other brokers say deals not contingent on deregulation are moving along as planned. For example, Giddens says there "is a lot of activity" in dealmaking for stations once held by Park

Communications that were put on the selling block last year.

Most radio broadcasters contend that the liberalized rules being considered would be a vast improvement over current restrictions that limit groups to owning a total 40 stations nationwide—up to 20 AM and 20 FM signals—and a maximum two AMs and two FMs in each local market.

Brokers are anxious for the anticipated flurry of station trading that deregulation likely will bring. Meanwhile, some of the "more aggressive" groups are doing business as usual, says media broker Jim Blackburn. "This hasn't changed the behavior of the aggressive buyers," Blackburn says of the impact of the delayed bill. "If I were a buyer, I'd be very busy now. In the largest markets, consolidation has begun. It's inexorable."

Some groups continue to forge deals in markets where they already own several stations, Blackburn says, bringing them close toor over—the current ownership limits. As a result, these groups will have an edge in station trading when the bill passes, Blackburn says.

Meanwhile, the "least aggressive" companies seem to be waiting until telcom reform is

"chiseled in stone" before setting out on acquisitions, Blackburn says, adding that groups that hesitate to buy until the rules are intact will find themselves sellers, not buyers, in their markets as larger companies capitalize on deals the smaller groups pass up.

Arbitron, broadcasters meet on issue of Hispanic listeners

The "least aggressive"

reform is "chiseled

in stone" before setting out on acquisitions.

-Jim Blackburn, media broker

A lthough Arbitron officials say their fall survey showing a steep hike in audience shares for Los Angeles's Hispanic radio stations is accurate, they agreed to provide more information about future diaries turned in by Hispanic radio listeners to broadcasters.

A meeting among Arbitron executives, including president Steve Morris and representatives of every radio station in the Los Angeles metropolitan area last week, took place after broadcasters complained that Arbitron's exclusive use of bilingual interviewers for the fall survey caused the surge in Spanish listener shares.

KLOS(FM) General Manager Bill Sommers said that more households in the area were targeted as Hispanic by bilingual interviewers and that that inflated the number of Spanish-speaking respondents to Arbitron's last survey.

To correct what Sommers and other broadcasters describe as a "problem" in their market, they have requested Arbitron interviewers to ask diary keepers detailed questions about their language preference. The broadcasters have also asked to see the comment pages from diaries returned by those targeted as Hispanic in the last survey, and they want Arbitron to determine how many calls to potential diary-keepers were completed in Spanish during last fall's survey, Sommers said.

Arbitron spokesman Thomas Mocarsky said the company will let broadcasters view the diary comment pages turned in by Hispanic households and that Arbitron will look into tracking the number of calls completed in Spanish. Mocarsky also said Arbitron will consider doing a "language enumeration study" of Los Angeles to determine the language preference of area citizens.

"We just want reliable statistics," said Sommers, who serves as a spokesman for the concerned Los Angeles broadcasters. "Broadcasters are still unhappy that Arbitron can't tell us exactly how many diaries were returned from Spanish-speaking respondents. As customers, we want accountability."

Meanwhile, Mocarsky said audience shares for Spanish stations increased an average 13% in 10 other high-density Hispanic markets, according to Arbitron statistics.

In markets without a significant Hispanic population, Mocarsky said, Spanish stations gained an average 10% greater audience share. He also said that the audience share for most English-language stations in Los Angeles has remained steady or declined since summer 1994, while shares for most Spanish stations in the area have increased over the same time period, —DP

1970s oldies appeal to masses, study says

ldies from the 1970s may be the next mass-appeal music format, say researchers at Stratford Research and The Interep Radio Store.

According to Stratford's recent survey of 1,000 radio listeners, 1970s-era oldies are most popular with listeners ages 35-44 who are also fans of adult contemporary and classic rock formats. The survey concluded that "among those listeners with a primary interest in the 1970s, 100% said they listen often" to the '70s format.

Men and women, in roughly equal numbers, were fans of '70s oldies, Stratford concluded. Meanwhile, 57% of those listeners said they also listen often to classic rock formats, and 42% said they frequently listen to oldies formats of other eras as well, Interep reported.

The first pioneers of the 1970s-era format were KCBS-FM Los Angeles which broke CBS Radio's "All Rock and Roll Oldies" format which features 1970s and 1980s oldies—and wCOF(FM) St. Petersburg, Fla., in fall 1993. Interep researcher Marla Pirner says more than 100 stations nationwide have switched to the format.

"From its inception two years ago, the 1970s format received a tremendous amount of attention from both the radio industry and the advertising community," Pirner says. "Yet this discussion generally consisted of theories and opinions. We felt it was time to conduct an objective study." —DP

CBS update: Mason ousts Calarco

In the latest reshuffling of CBS Radio executives, newly named CBS Radio Station Group President Dan Mason says he temporarily will oversee the group's 21 owned-and-operated FM stations, replacing Rod Calarco, vice president, FM division. News of Calarco's planned Feb. 2 departure closely followed the appointment of Group W Radio executive Ed Goldman to replace CBS AM station division head Anna Mae Sokusky earlier this month. Calarco had served as VP of the FM division for 24 years. Before joining CBS, Calarco was general manager of wCBS-FM New York and KRQR(FM) San Francisco.

MetroTraffic reporter, pilot killed

MetroTraffic reporter James Endsley, 49, of Cleveland, was killed last Tuesday when the plane from which he was reporting crashed into a radio tower. Pilot James MacVeigh, 29, of Akron, also died in the crash. Endsley earlier this month celebrated his 10th anniversary with MetroTraffic. He spent most of those years reporting on Cleveland-area traffic, Metro officials say. About 18 months ago, news/talk wwwE(AM) Cleveland hired Endsley, who used the on-air name Fred Wesley, as the station's full-time traffic reporter. Endsley shared his reports with Metro's other Cleveland affiliates.

wwwE General Manager Dennis Best estimates that the plane crashed shortly after Endsley filed his 7:40 a.m. report, because the reporter failed to file scheduled updates at 7:50 and 8 a.m. Without Endsley, Best says, wwwE is using traffic reports from other Metro sources. Assisting Endsley's family and friends "has been our primary focus," Best says.

Kaelin hangs up mike

The fame surrounding O.J. Simpson-trial celebrity and burgeoning movie talent Kato Kaelin apparently has caused him to resign from his midday air shift at KLSX(FM) Los Angeles. After testifying in the Simpson trial, Kaelin joined KLSX in August 1995 to host a talk show as the station shifted from classic rock to a young talk format. Although he signed a two-year contract. Kaelin resigned last week to pursue "other opportunities," according to KLSX General Manager Bob Moore. "Doing the radio show five days a week was becoming difficult because of his other commitments," Moore says. "But he was good for us and got us a lot of publicity." Moore has signed former KROQ-FM Los Angeles Lovelines host Riki Rachtman to fill Kaelin's slot.

Comedy Central, United Stations unite for 1996

For at least one more year, Comedy Central and United Stations Radio Networks will continue to distribute programing to radio stations nationwide. Comedy Central Senior Vice President Art Bell and United Stations President/CEO Nick Verbitsky last week said the companies signed a one-year contract to develop radio programing based on Comedy Central shows for national distribution. The companies paired last year to create the Comedy Central Radio Network to distribute short-form shows.

Premiere announces stock offering

Premiere Radio Networks has registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission to sell 1.4 million shares of its Class A common stock. Roughly 140,000 shares will be sold by stockholders, and the remainder, some 1.2 million shares, will be sold by Premiere, company officials say.

Premiere could take in up to $20.5 million from the sale of 1.2 million shares at an estimated $16 per share. Premiere says net proceeds from the stock sale may be used to acquire "assets or businesses complementary to" the company's existing assets, and for general corporate purposes.—DP

C<sup>3</sup> to replace some networks' fare with kids shows

By Rich Brown

R ich Frank has a plan that could dramatically alter the relationship between cable networks and cable system operators.

Frank, chairman of Comcast Corp.'s C<sup>3</sup> programing arm, says the MSO will take the unorthodox step of preempting some cable network programing and replacing it with original shows produced by C<sup>3</sup>. Frank, the syndication veteran who took over as C<sup>3</sup> chairman/CEO last fall, expects to debut three hours of weekly children's programing within 18 months. The programing likely will include in-house C<sup>3</sup> productions as well as programing by outside producers.

Cable networks historically have been protective of their time and reluctant to turn over portions of their schedules to

> Harrington heads MSNBC

Mark Harrington has been named vice president and general manager of MSNBC, the NBC-Microsoft joint-venture cable and online news service. He'll report to NBC News President Andrew Lack. Harrington has been senior vice president, CBS New Media, since April 1994. Before that he was vice president, Olympics, from 1989 to 1994, and earlier spent 15 years at CBS News, including stints as an Emmy-winning news producer and later as vice president, news broadcasts. Lack said Harrington had "the perfect balance of skills to lead the charge for MSNBC." — RB cable system operators. But Frank says it is about time that the relationship between cable networks and cable operators became more like the arrangement between broadcast networks and their affiliates.

Nickelodeon, Disney Channel and USA Network are among the cable networks that could be partially preempted in favor of Comcast's kids programing, Frank says.

Comcast plans to take up the preemption matter with cable networks as their contracts with the cable operator come up for renewal.

Frank revealed the plan last week after a speech at the convention of the Association of Independent Television Stations Inc. in Las Vegas. During the speech, he called on television stations to program more responsibly. He did not specify that C<sup>3</sup>'s kids programing would be available to broadcast stations, although the  $C^3$  charter calls for the company to sell to all buyers.

"Because children watch you, your communities

Frank says Comcast plans to preempt some cable network programing for original shows produced by its programing arm, C<sup>3</sup>.

count on you," Frank told TV station executives. "Look at your schedules. Right now there's plenty of room to add children's programing each week. It's high time to give something back."

Subscribers like a la carte, TCI test indicates

With set-top box in mind, company testing video-buying habits of viewers

By Jim McConville

hen it comes to choosing cable programing services, Tele-Communications Inc. is finding that for cable subscribers, individual choice is better.

TCI's Mount Prospect, Ill., "Intelligent Television" cable trial, begun in May 1994, so far shows that subscribers would rather choose services a la carte than select a customized programing package.

The 60-channel cable trial, hooked to 1,320 homes in this Chicago suburb, aims to gain insight into subscriber buying habits before TCI rolls out a digital set-top cable service later this year.

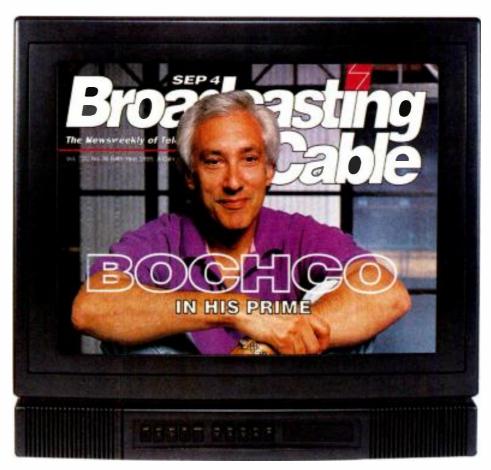

"Our goal is to learn what it takes to get the [digital] set-top box in the home and what it takes to drive buy rates within each programing product group," says Jim Mitchell, project manager, TCl of Illinois.

The Mount Prospect subscribers choose from a 22-channel a la carte menu to create customized packages, or order individual networks or payper-view movies from an on-screen menu. "There's very little that's predetermined for them," says Mitchell.

TCI's list of a la carte channels reads like a who's who of recently launched cable nets: The Learning Channel, Bravo, ESPN2, E! Entertainment Television, The Travel Channel, TV Japan, Cartoon Network, Jones Computer Network, TV Food Network, Home & Garden Network, The History Channel, Country Music Television, Turner Classic Movies and CNNfn (formerly CNN International).

Last Dec. 18, TCI added eight networks, expanding its a la carte menu to 22 channels. New nets are Classic

Cable

Sports, Golf Channel, Outdoor Life, Fit TV. Canal de Noticias, America's Talking, Independent Film Channel and Z Music.

The test also includes eight multi-plex channels and 30 channels of nearvideo-on-demand movies.

PPV network Your Choice TV, which had occupied 24 channels, reduced its commitment to six channels last year, then dropped out altogether last July.

Twenty-one of the a la carte channels can be purchased for $1.25 a month each, while TV Japan is offered a la carte for $14.95. TCI program packages include any four channels for $3.95; eight channels for $6.85; 13 for $8.95 or all 21 channels for $9.95.

To date, cable subscribers have favored individual a la carte channels over clustered packages, Mitchell says."So far there's a clear preference.... Individual channels have performed at a much better rate than any package. And with packages, the smaller they are the better they perform."

Mitchell says that the preference for a la carte may be linked to the ordering process. "Part of that is due to the fact that [subscribers] can actually impulse-purchase individual channels through the TV; to order [a package] they have to call us on the phone." TCI will find out whether subscribers are buying individual channels because "it's easier to buy them that way, or...because they really want just one or two channels."

The company hopes to get more detailed test data when its digital settop boxes arrive later this year. "Once the digital set-top box becomes available and we can expand channel lineups," Mitchell says, "we'll have a much better sense of how to package both near-video-on-demand movies and a la carte multiplex movie services."

Mitchell says that the test channels, determined partly by which networks volunteered for the test, were chosen to give subscribers programing variety. "It was a matter of filling some gaps and types of programing that weren't there and finding the right partners that would be willing to participate."

TCI chose Mount Prospect because of its dual-cable capability. "It offered a second cable that went to every home; this area was originally built as dual-cable plant, and the second cable wasn't really being used for anything," he says. "It gives us a full 60 channels of capacity without having to make any real significant capital investment."

TCI this year plans to add non-cable subscribers to the Mount Prospect test. "In the past our efforts have always been on the existing cable homes," Mitchell says. "Now we're going to turn our attention to non-sub homes."

AT shows on the move

Two America's Talking shows, along with their producers, will migrate to sister network CNBC's weekday schedule during the next two weeks. The shows moving are America After Hours and Politics with Chris Matthews. America After Hours, a half-hour program of one-on-one interviews of TV and Hollywood personalities conducted by host Mike Jerrick, premieres tonight (Jan. 29) at 11. The show takes over the time slot of Real Personal, which CNBC dropped on Dec. 11, 1995. Senior producer Gail Frank makes the move with the show. Politics with Chris Matthews is a half-hour daily talk show with syndicated columnist Matthews. It is executive-produced by Glenn Meehan. The show, which will debut on Feb. 5 at 8 p.m., replaces Tim Russert (Monday/Tuesday), Cal Thomas (Wednesday/Thursday) and Gerry Spence (Friday), each of which will move to CNBC's weekend schedule as part of a network reshuffling announced two weeks ago. The shows will take permanent slots in the network's lineup, a CNBC spokes--RB woman says.

Travel Channel joins Mardi Gras party

By Jim McConville

The Travel Channel is setting aside part of its daily programing schedule to march along with Mardi Gras in New Orleans. Travel Channel Mardi Gras coverage, which airs Feb. 15-25, will comprise 80 hours of programing, including five continuous hours of live coverage on Feb.

20, or "Fat Tuesday," the Mardi Gras finale. The live parade coverage, a cooperative effort with Fox affiliate wVUE-TV New Orleans, will air 11 a.m.-4 p.m. and will be hosted by comedian Elayne Boosler.

The cable network's Mardi Gras programing also will include the premiere of Burt Wolf's Local Flavor: New Orleans, an original special on the history of Mardi Gras; taped highlights from Carnival in Rio de Janeiro, and several features on New Orleans history, including Mardi Gras: The World's Greatest Party, a historical overview of the parade (Feb. 15 at 8 p.m. ET), and Ghost of Stone, about New Orleans' famous Lafayette Cemetery No. 1 (9:30 that night).

The programing block also serves as a crosspromotional vehicle for the network's cable affiliates, says Dalton Delan, senior vice president, programing and production. Travel Channel affiliates this year received Mardi Gras promotional kits filled with parade masks and costume jewelry, along with custom newspaper ad slicks and an order form for requesting a 30-second Travel Channel spot.

Launched in 1987, The Travel Channel passes 19.3 million addressable cable households on approximately 1,300 systems, according to Nielsen Media Research.

New lineup for Family

The Family Channel in April will debut a two-hour afternoon talk show as part of a planned revamp of the network's daily schedule.

Home & Family, starring Cristina Ferrare (left), is the first of several original series for women and kids that the network plans to eventually place in the 1-7 p.m. weekday block. The full lineup is expected to be in place by September, according to programing chief Tony Thomopoulos.

Home & Family each day will likely feature 12 segments on home and family issues, says Thomopoulos. The show will be telecast live, 1-3 p.m. ET, from a house now under construction on the Universal Studios lot in Hollywood.

In addition to segments from the "house," roving correspondents and crews will report regularly from around the country on local and national stories. Home shopping elements also will be worked into the show, and viewer participation by call-ins, faxes and e-mail will be encouraged.

Executive producer of the new series is Woody Fraser, a veteran of Good Morning America, That's Incredible and The Home Show. Ferrare, also a veteran of The Home Show, is married to Thomopoulos. —RB Quelling industry speculation that Fox's fX cable network is planning to push out originals in favor of sports and off-net programing, BROADCASTING & CABLE has learned that the network will announce three new original series by early this week. FX programing executive Rich Ross says the network expects to announce an inhouse-produced spin-off of an existing series. The network also will announce its first game show and first reality series to be produced by as-yet-undisclosed West Coast-based outside producers. "Our original development is more active than ever," says Ross.

Adelphia signs up for infomercial channel

Adelphia Communications Corp. joins MSOs Cox Communications and Jones International as a partner in Production Information Network (PIN), a 24-hour cable infomercial channel. Terms of the partnership were not disclosed. So far, Adelphia has launched PIN on cable systems serving roughly one-third of its 1.6 million cable subscribers.

Showtime re-ups with 'Outer Limits'

Showtime Networks has picked up an additional two seasons (44 hours) of the sci-fi series The Outer Limits from producers MGM/Trilogy/Atlantis, the cable network said last week at the NAPTE convention. The Outer Limits is in its second season on Showtime and its first year in syndication.

Popcorn comes to Paterson

The Popcorn Channel has agreed to carry U.S. Cable's 23,000-subscriber Paterson, N.J.-based cable system starting Feb. 1. Besides local cable listings, the channel will display U.S. Cable of Paterson's pay-per-view movie listings and the system's logo on the local cable movie guide portion of the screen. The Popcorn Channel, launched Nov. 28, 1995, also features trailers of theatrical film releases.—JM

HEADENDINGS

National Media buys PRTV

National Media Corp. will acquire TV infomercial producer Positive Response Television Inc. Terms of the agreement call for PRTV shareholders to receive approximately one-half share of National Media common stock for each share of PRTV common stock. PRTV shareholders then will own about 7% of National Media Corp.

The deal needs PRTV shareholder and regulatory approval. PRTV founder/chairman Mike Levey also created the "Amazing Discoveries" infomercials.

TBS walks on 'Wild' side

In the spirit of ABC's 1970s series The American Sportsman, the Turner Broadcasting System next fall will air Wild! Life Adventures on TBS. The monthly hour-long series, to be produced by Turner Original Productions, will feature first-person accounts of TV/film personalities who venture into the out-of-doors. Unlike ABC's popular American Sportsman, which celebrated famous personalities hunting fish and fowł, Wild! will take a softer bent with guests addressing environmental issues. The show premieres on TBS in September and in syndication through Turner Programming Services.

Expanding one's Mind

Mind Extension University, a subsidiary of Jones Educational Networks, will launch a 13-part, monthly documentary series on the history of communication. Communication: The Human Imperative will start this month. Co-produced with the Library of Congress, Communication will be narrated by actor Michael Dorn. The series will explore the development of communication from storytelling to e-mail. The first hour-long program, "Freezing Time: Photography as Visual Archaeology," was to air last Saturday (Jan. 27) at 7 p.m. ET.

Programing will consist of two original half-hours per week to air Tuesday and Thursday.

NBC signs Olympian deal with Panasonic

More than $21 million in gear to be used in Atlanta

By Glen Dickson

R BC has signed a huge lease/purchase deal with Panasonic Broadcast to provide the bulk of the network's production gear for its coverage of the 1996 summer Olympic Games. Under the agreement, NBC will use Panasonic's D-3 and D-5 digital tape formats as the main recording medium for its Olympics facilities in Atlanta and New York.

The Panasonic gear is worth more than $21 million, but exactly how much NBC will pay to use it was not disclosed. NBC's director of Olympics engineering, Dave Mazza, would not discuss the discount structure for equipment that NBC will purchase or the rental pricing for gear that the network will use solely for the games. He says NBC still is undecided about how much of the Olympics gear it will buy.

"As we approach the games, anybody in the NBC system has the opportunity to buy out the systems," says Mazza. "For example, we've already purchased 80 D-3 VTRs and we're leasing another 140 on top of that."

Panasonic Broadcast President Steve Bonica and NBC's executive vice president for technology, Michael J. Sherlock, seal the Olympics deal.

NBC has worked out similar flexible lease/purchase agreements with other Olympics suppliers, such as Quantel and Chyron, to handle its extensive Olympics equipment demands. "We only purchase what we have a home for," says Mazza.

For editing and recording, NBC will use 223 D-3 digital composite VTRs (140 of which will be the new, smaller AJ-D360 units); 31 AJ-D580 D-5 digital component VTRs; 16 LQ-D5500

AOB gets a lift from Egripment

Camera support specialist Egripment of Holland has won a $2 million contract from ACOG (the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games) to supply host broadcaster Atlanta Olympic Broadcasting (AOB) with remote-controlled camera heads, camera cranes and camera support rigs for the 1996 games. Egripment will set up a service center and support staff in Atlanta to install and maintain 20 camera cranes. more than 165 remote heads and more than 25 miles of cable. Products range from the Microshot remote head, which works with tiny lipstick cameras (mounted on the pole vault bar, for example), to the sweeping Javelin crane, which can elevate the camera to a height of 10 meters (ideal for overhead shots of whitewater canoeing). -GD

The Egripment Hi-Lo platform can support a camera operator and full-size studio camera at a height of two meters. re-recordable digital optical-disk recorders, and a handful of MII and S-VHS VTRs.

The D-5 machines will be used primarily for high-end graphics; NBC is now operating some D-5s in its New York graphics department. The digital optical-disk recorders will provide rapid access and quick playback for graphic stills and moving clips, which Mazza says will be a vast improvement over using VTRs for those tasks. "If you need to find a clip, you can just dial to a different timecode address on disk, instead of frantically loading up cassettes."

For field acquisition, NBC will employ 19 AJ-D300 D-3 camcorders to supplement the coverage from mobile units, as well as 40 point-ofview (POV) cameras mounted in fixed locations. Eight AQ-23W 16:9/4:3 switchable cameras will make their broadcast debut in NBC studios in the International Broadcast Center.

"We'll have D-3 camcorders all over the place to cover breaking news and do ENG pieces for all of the venues," Mazza says. "We'll use the POVs for unmanned wide shots: up in the rafters, pointed at the skyline or in the tunnels."

Mazza emphasizes that the POVs won't be tiny lipstick cameras, simply smaller 3-chip models (the WV-F250 and WV-E550) for those places a manned camera can't fit.

NBC may also use Panasonic's new DVC PRO digital ENG format in a "Handycam-type application," to give to stringers and athletes for bonus coverage, Mazza says. "That's still in discussion."

For the Olympics, Panasonic also will deliver more than 1,250 production and broadcast-quality monitors to NBC, along with an array of Panasonic/Ramsa audio equipment: digital audio tape and compact disk players, audio consoles, speakers and ampliSee The Media World's Top Groups Battle Against Hunger!

Discovery explores Latin America, Asia with DigiCipher II

Regionalized commercials expected to open new markets, increase ad revenue

By Glen Dickson

Discovery Networks International has spent more than $1 million on two General Instruments DigiCipher II digital video compression systems. The cable network will use the MPEG-2 encoding systems at its origination facilities for Latin America and Asia to deliver multiple channels via satellite in the two markets by the end of the year.

Program content largely will remain the same across the multiple channels. The difference will be in the interstitial material, which will be regionally targeted. Discovery expects the new capability to boost ad revenue and open new markets; in Malaysia, for example, government regulations require 90% of advertising to be locally produced.

"We are maximizing the benefits of digital compression technology by using it in a commercial application," says Charlie Humbard, vice president, network distribution and technical operations, Discovery Communications. "Discovery Channel will create multiple pathways for our programing inventory by developing specific channels that incorporate local language and market-specific advertising."

Discovery is to begin installing the DigiCipher II unit for Latin America today (Jan. 29) at Post Edge, its origi-

The network now distributes one Spanish-language feed to Latin America off the PanAm-Sat-1 satellite. Another feed to Spain and Portugal on HISPASAT won't be affected by the DigiCipher II plans.

The network will start transmitting one channel with DigiCipher II to Latin America when its new transponder on the PAS-3 satellite comes online on Feb. 20, says Timothy Jackson, senior manager of technical operations, Discovery Networks International. Jackson expects Discovery to be pumping three compressed feeds to the market by the end of the year.

In Asia, Discovery now transmits its Australia/New Zealand service off PAS-2, with origination in San Francisco. Origination on April 1 will move to Group W's new Asia Broadcast Center in Singapore, where it will begin all-digital transmission from the DigiCipher II unit. The GI encoder is due to be installed in the Group W facility by late February.

"When we put this GI system in Singapore, that feed will be CCIR 601 component digital all the way through, from tape playout to the affiliate's IRD," Jackson says.

Discovery already offers two targeted analog feeds to Asia: a commercialfree feed to the bulk of Asia off the Palapa B-2P satellite, and a Taiwan feed with Taiwanese commercials and Chinese subtitles off Apstar I. The long-term plan is to keep these analog feeds on those birds and transmit up to six digital channels off PAS-2 by the end of 1997, Jackson says.

Pumping out different commercial material for the channels is made possible by the Asia Broadcast Center's hybrid cart machine/disk cache system: an Odetics TCS-90 loaded with Digital Betacam feeding a Tektronix Profile cache.

"The split of those feeds will be handled by the Tektronix digital cache. The breaks will define those channels, with the spots playing off the Profile," Jackson says. "The digital cache has really given us the ability to do it effectively. We couldn't do it off separate tape sources."

Digital how-to from MSTV and EIA

Groups are building multimillion-dollar digital TV station broadcasters can use as model

By Harry A. Jessell

The Association for Maximum Service Television and the Electronic Industries Association are finalizing plans for a "developmental" TV station that would show broadcasters how to make the transition to digital TV.

The two trade groups hope to announce plans for the how-to station within the next two or three weeks, says MSTV President Margita White.

MSTV board member Ed Reilly of McGraw-Hill Broadcasting says that MSTV tentatively has agreed to cover 25% of the cost of the project. He declined to say what the total cost will be, but sources say it will approach $3 million.

Broadcasters that help fund the project will "save some of the mistake money" they will pay if they try to implement digital TV on their own, Reilly said.

White and Reilly say that the funding is to be supplemented by heavy in-kind contributions of time, equipment and other resources by broadcasters and the broadcast equipment and consumer electronics manufacturers represented by EIA.

If all goes well, White says, the station could be up and running by year's end. Reilly is doubtful it can happen so soon. He declined to predict when the station will be ready.

The plan is not to build a station from the ground up, but to upgrade an existing station to simulcast digital TV along with conventional analog NTSC service. That's the way digital TV will be introduced in the U.S., Reilly says.

Using the Grand Alliance digital TV system, broadcasters can offer a variety of services, including high-definition television, several channels of standard-definition television (comparable to today's analog), distribution of data to PCs and other devices or a mix of all three.

The Grand Alliance system was developed by AT&T, Philips, Thomson, Zenith, General Instrument, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the David Sarnoff Research Center. The FCC is now considering whether to adopt the system as a national standard.

Broadcasters are pressuring the government to give each TV station a second channel so that they can introduce digital TV while maintaining service to conventional TV sets. After most Americans have bought digital TV sets, broadcasters would give back their original channels.

SNET to launch cable network

$4.5 billion Connecticut project officially kills its VDT plans

By Richard Tedesco.

S outhern New England Telephone plans to have a hybrid fiber/coaxial network up and running in Connecticut next year, and it plans to wire the whole state by 2009.

Pending approval by the state Department of Public Utility Control, the company expects to offer its SNET Personal Vision to 22% of Connecticut households by the end of 1997. Initial service areas will include Darien, Fairfield, Norwalk, Stamford, Weston, Westport, Farmington, New Britain and West Hartford.

Personal Vision will consist of 76 analog channels, which will include impulse pay-perview service and localized content. "We will be offering at a minimum all of the channels people are used to and specific programing that satisfies Connecticut's needs as well," says Patrice Listfield, Personal Vision president.

SNET has no plans to offer any interactive services, apart from the impulse PPV, nor does it plan to go digital or offer high-speed cable modem online access. Although Listfield says SNET is not giving up the idea of interactive TV, she says digital video "is not feasible right now."

The company will, however, offer telephone service over the same network. Hoshang Mulla, SNET vice president of cable network planning, says technical tests of combined analog video and telephone service have proved successful.

With the announcement of its plans for the $4.5 billion cable project, SNET officially killed the option of video dialtone service. (It currently has a VDT test running in 350 households in West Hartford.) In areas of the state where SNET does not now offer service, it hopes to develop relationships with Nynex and Woodbury Telephone Co. that will enable it to offer cable service.

Personal Vision's key selling points will be customized programing packages and frequent PPV starting times for movies. Localized content likely will include public affairs and local sports programing, plus carriage of local broadcast affiliates, Listfield says. SNET also will seek to undercut cable operators' prices, although Listfield declined to discuss rates.

SNET intends to reach 36% of Connecticut households with Personal Vision by the end of 1998, 64% by 2000 and 81% by 2003.

Time Warner encouraged by modem test

Elmira subscribers like customized local content, price

By Richard Tedesco

R esults from its high-speed modem test on Paragon Cable in Elmira, N.Y., are spurring Time Warner Cable to introduce similar service in other markets early this year.

For a $30 installation charge and a $25 fee, participants receive Zenith modem units that provide access to a local database and the Internet. Paragon has had virtually no churn among its 200 test participants, and the waiting list is 300 customers long.

Randy Roswell, Paragon general manager, says focus groups reveal that heavy users would pay double for the service. "There's a real business here," he says.

"What we're looking at now is where we go beyond Elmira," says Time Warner Cable spokesman Michael Luftman. Time Warner will announce those locations shortly. Deployment of the first of 50,000 Toshiba modems that Time Warner committed to buy is set for its San Diego system.

Introduction in several other urban markets is awaiting the delivery of the first of 50,000 higher-speed Motorola modem units that Time Warner Cable ordered late last year, Luftman says.

Customized local content is a prime reason for customer satisfaction in Elmira, Luftman says. Through their modems, users can track local government meetings and school sports events and read updated news summaries from the daily Elmira Star Gazette. The system also offers a graphically enhanced version of Time Inc.'s Pathfinder service, featuring electronic versions of Time publications.

The test will segue into commercial deployment in the 40,000-subscriber Elmira system at the end of March.

Prodigy hopes to revitalize with new COO

Lansing will help service 'embrace the Internet'

By Richard Tedesco

ooking to revitalize its business, Prodigy Services Co. last week hired a partner from McKinsey & Co. to be its chief operating officer.

William J. Lansing, a specialist in new media who served as a Prodigy consultant, was appointed executive vice president and chief operating officer for the online company. He will oversee virtually all operations, with emphasis on longterm strategy and development.

"My mission is pretty straightforward," Lansing says. "The strategy is to embrace the Internet. We are working very hard in all dimensions to make our service consistent with, and connected to, the Internet."

News of Lansing's appointment follows press reports in mid-January of a possible sale by Sears and IBM of their respective 50% ownerships of Prodigy.

Prodigy also announced the formation of an Internet Services Group to be directed by Gerry Mueller, who was promoted to executive vice president and general manager. Mueller had been senior vice president of operations.

Part of Lansing's plan to improve Prodigy includes creating new material. And fresh material has been added with the recent arrival of Josh Grotstein as senior vice president of content. He debuted multiplayer checkers, intended as an excuse for chat, a formula he says Prodigy will follow for other multiplayer areas.

William Lansing is Prodigy's new VP/GOO

Other additions will include content for kids, music sites for sampling, chat about bands and "Chat Soup," highlights from the previous day's chat rooms, delivered with an edge. Prodigy also will add Web pages and probably will permit freer access, to be "at one with the Internet," says Grotstein.

Continental to test cable modems in Boston area

Continental Cablevision plans to conduct another cable modem test in its backyard, offering Internet access to subscribers in five Boston suburbs beginning in February.

The six-month test will employ BBN Planet Corp. for engineering, with modems supplied by Andover, Mass.-based LANcity. Continental plans to ramp up the technical/market test to a universe of 200 households by the end, and to segue into commercial deployment at that time, says Will Richmond, director of business development. The area's recently upgraded cable system determined the location of the test.

Along with free Internet access, Continental subscribers in Wellsley, Newton, Needham, Watertown and Cambridge will enjoy access to the World Wide Web and will be able to send and receive e-mail. Some product marketing also will be tested. Continental won't customize any local information services for the test, but plans to do so when it rolls out modem services.

"We think content is very important, and we want to have a role in it as well," says Richmond.

A successful limited test in Cambridge preceded this one. Richmond says Continental may initiate tests in other markets concurrent with the Boston run. Other modems also might be tested in those markets.

Working the Web

For those who can't get enough celebrity stuff from E! on cable, E! Online will debut as a stand-alone service on the World Wide Web in May. The first incarnation of the new service, a joint venture of E! and clnet, will appear this week with a home page (http://www.- eonline.com). Users can sign up for an e-mail newsletter and offer input about content.

E! saw an opening online and figured it could draw its young, upscale audience into cyberspace for expanded coverage of E! on-air stories, as well as for interaction with its personalities and other celebrities. It will be ad-supported and "extremely visual," according to Dale Hopkins, E!'s senior vice president, marketing.

AllPolitics, as usual?

Time Magazine and CNN this week are launching a Web site covering political news. AllPolitics (http://AllPolitics.com) will deliver campaign developments, election results, speeches, campaign ads, games and interactive features. It also will display results from the ongoing Time/CNN Election Monitor poll, gauging oplnions of 5,000 voters nationwide. Reports from Time and CNN correspondents will be included, along with analysis from political experts.

Paper made air

The New York Times last week launched its long-touted Web site (http://www.nytimes.com) with a mix of original and archival material and interactive elements. The site will feature updated news; Cyber-Times, a daily site focusing on technology topics, and a search function for job-seekers and home-buyers.

In addition to searching the Times archives, users can devise their own daily clipping service and do the famous Times crossword puzzle in an interactive format. Sections in the electronic edition will include the Front Page, Editorial and Op-Ed, Politics, Arts & Leisure and Travel.—RT

we're still the one with radio executives.

Since 1931, radio station executives have relied on Broadcasting & Cable* for the most complete, authoritative coverage of the electronic information media. In fact, when industry leaders were recently asked which publications best cover the topics important to them (Congressional & Regulatory, Advertising & Marketing, Engineering/ Technical, Economics & Business, Programming & Syndication, Journalism) only one magazine was rated in the top three in every category—Broadcasting & Cable.

Considering this long-standing commitment to journalistic excellence, it should come as no surprise that Broadcasting & Cable is also considered the most credible publication among all executives surveyed and among both the top 100 and 100+ groups. Or that it ties with Radio & Records as the most valuable among the top 100 station General Managers.

Combine all this with the fact that Broadcasting & Cable has the highest 50% receivership, and you'll agree that there's no better way to reach the 40% executives that control the nation's airwaves. Call your Broadcasting & Cable 30% sales representative at (212) 337-6940 today!

Still waiting

EDITOR: I have been attempting to call the FCC to get an answer to a simple question for over a month.

I couldn't reach anybody for most of December because the government was shut down. When the government finally reopened, I couldn't get in touch with anybody at the FCC because of the snowstorm in D.C. When I called yesterday, the commission was closed for Martin Luther King's birthday. When I called today, I reached voice mail. (Don't these people know how to answer a phone?) When I tried to leave a message, I was told I couldn't because the mailbox was full.

There's a lot more to the government shutdown controversy than just Bill Clinton and Newt Gingrich. It's about a federal bureaucracy that has gotten totally out of control and totally unresponsive to those it is supposed to be serving. The FCC is a prime example, and it is but a minuscule part of the federal government.

In addition to corporate taxes and personal income taxes, broadcasters also are forced to pay filing fees for everything we do, including a filing fee for our annual ownership reports. Then we have to pay an annual regulatory fee on top of that. What is it we are paying for?

Maybe one of these days I'll be able to reach someone at the FCC who can answer my question, without having to wade through voice mail and/or being transferred to at least six different offices. Yeah, and maybe I'll win the lottery too.—Larry Fuss, president/ general manager, Delta Radio Inc., Cleveland, Miss.

Anniversary update

EDITOR: I found your Nov. 6, 1995, 75th Anniversary of Broadcasting issue to be very interesting, informative and fun to read. I would, however, like to point out that you may have missed something.

In 1984 the manner by which all television broadcasters gathered news was changed forever with the inauguration of Conus, the world's first satellite newsgathering organization. As you probably know, with the introduction of Conus, television stations were free to select their own headlines, just as newspapers do. With the introduction of Conus and satellite newsgathering, for the first time local stations did not have to wait for the network in order to present national or international news. I believe that the introduction of Conus and the concept of satellite newsgathering was about as big a change as any since the introduction of color television.—Stanley S. Hubbard, president/CEO, Hubbard Broadcasting Inc. (managing general partner of Conus), St. Paul

EDITOR: In the Editor's Note accompanying Don Russell's Dec. 18, 1995, letter on the DuMont Network, you've omitted a DuMont-owned station in Washington and added a nonexistent Paramount station "on the West Coast."

WTTG, like WABD, was only with DuMont, one of four commercial VHF channels in the District of Columbia market, but as Pittsburgh's one and only, wDTV was affiliated with all four networks.

It should have been no surprise to anyone, then, that when DuMont Broadcasting threw in the towel, Westinghouse jumped at the opportunity to convert ch. 2 to KDKA-TV, while the two ch. 5 stations had to be spun off as Metropolitan Broadcasting. (Thanks to the arrival of John Kluge, however, that turned into a viable and growing MetroMedia and laid the foundation for DuMont's revival as Fox.)

Paramount did have two experimental licenses, both in Los Angeles: w6XYZ, which became KTLA, always an independent and never affiliated with DuMont or any other network until The WB began recently (DuMont's only Los Angeles affiliate was KTTV, which, coincidentally, Kluge later brought into the MetroMedia fold and so was able to lay on the table before Rupert Murdoch), and w6xLA, a mobile facility, operated as a development auxiliary to w6xYZ, but abandoned with the switch to commercial operation on w6xYZ's channel (known

With its acquisition of the Balaban and Katz theater chain in the Midwest, Paramount's theater subsidiary also picked up wBKB (for Balaban and Katz Broadcasting), which carried, not DuMont, but ABC in Chicago. Thus Leonard Goldenson, who headed Paramount Theatres when Uncle Sam forced the separation of movie studios and theater chains, was "the affiliate who bought the network," even as Thomas Murphy and Michael Jordan would be one day, following in Goldenson's footsteps.

In her letter (under the same heading), Loreen Arbus properly credited Goldenson (her father) with negotiating the entry of film studios as major suppliers of network television programing. As both a broadcaster and a movie exhibitor, he could speak credibly to the concerns of both and pave the way for the movie studios to boldly go where only their off-label subsidiaries (Revue, Screen Gems, etc.) had cautiously ventured before.

Of course, Disney helped considerably by showing the way to use the Disneyland television program to attract audiences to theatrical releases (perhaps Goldenson had a hand in shaping that), a pattern followed with such offerings as *Warner Bros. Pre*sents and The M-G-M Hour.

Whether Goldenson was willing to accept Roy Disney's condition that ABC put up a third of the capital to build Disneyland Park (along with the Disney Studio and Western Printing and Lithograph, Disney's book and comic publisher) because he shared Roy's faith in Walt's vision or whether he was just hungrier for programing than NBC or CBS, he was the ideal candidate to lead the movies into television.

Whatever Goldenson's expectations, ABC's investment in Disneyland Park proved to be so good that the company reinvested its profits from the venture in another theme park, Marine World in the San Francisco Bay area.

For his role in finessing their transition into the modern era. Arbus's dad deserves laurels from all three affected businesses: movie production, movie exhibition and broadcasting. Each of them has benefited from walking through the doors that he opened.— Thomas D. Bratter, Los Angeles

Quantel's Taylor packages 'power of digits'

 $\int d d h =$

igital may be the broadcast buzzword of the '90s, but Richard Taylor thought it was a pretty hot idea back in 1975. That's when he and a group of colleagues left EMI Research Laboratories to start Quantel Ltd.

In his engineering post at EMI, the bulk of Taylor's work was for military and research contracts. But he also developed automation for color cameras for broadcast TV.

"We realized that there was going to be a huge demand for digital technology in the broadcast field," says Taylor, now Quantel's executive chairman. "In those days it was a totally analog world, and it simply cried out to have the power of digits."

Quantel is known as an industry vanguard in producing digital effects, graphics and editing machines. But the company's first broadcast product, in 1976, was a portable digital framestore synchronizer for handling remote ENG feeds, for which Quantel won contracts from CBS, ABC and the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.

The compact box also was capable of shrinking a picture to one-quarter size, a feature that CBC used during the opening ceremonies of the 1976 Olympic games in Montreal. CBC used Quantel's product to take the microwave feed of the Olympic torch-bearer running through the streets of Montreal, synchronize it, shrink the picture and superimpose it onto a wider shot of the crowd waiting in the stadium.

"In those days we were engineers building lumps of engineering for broadcast engineers," Taylor says. "But in 1976 at the Olympics, the way the machine was used was suddenly a creative use and we got exposed to the creative side of television: its insatiable demands and its sometimes unreasonable demands."

These demands led to Quantel's next product, an electronic zoom machine, in 1978. Taylor and his team began experimenting with storing still slides on computer disks and developed a machine to replace the slide scanner (now known as Picturebox). But the "still store" had a drawback the graphics that news and sports programs were saving were rather crude, captured by cameras off drawing boards.

"We thought: 'Why can't you do away with all that and replace the drawing board with electronics?' "Meanwhile, a Quantel engineer had designed a computer for his children that would allow them

"Technology should not get in the way."

Richard John Taylor

Executive chairman, Quantel Ltd., Newbury, England; b. April 15, 1945, Northwood, England; BS, electrical engineering, Manchester University, 1967; MS, electronics, London University, 1970; research engineer, EMI Research Laboratories, 1968-75; Quantel: managing director, 1975-89; named chairman, 1989; m. Judy Allport; children: James, 5; Emily, 3. to paint electronically (albeit rather primitively). The symbiosis of these ideas led to a new television graphics system in 1981, Paintbox, which offered graphic artists the electronic equivalent of pencil and paper.

The breakthrough of Paintbox was followed in 1983 with another graphic design tool, Mirage, a stand-alone effects machine that allows designers to put moving images on "bendy sheets" and manipulate them.

By 1984, multiple-arm disk technology surfaced that allows information to be read in parallel off disks, significantly boosting the storage and access capabilities of computers.

"It was the breakthrough we'd been waiting for to allow us to build a machine we'd had in our mind for some time—a disk-based effects editing machine," Taylor says. "That was the start of 'Harry.'"

The revolutionary Harry debuted in 1985, offering digital editing and multilayer effects in one machine. "Quite suddenly you could do all sorts of things that previously had merely been a dream," Taylor says. "It was made so the machine was a servant of the creative process, not the master, which I think so often becomes the case—that the technology overwhelms the creative user."

Quantel now is trying to outfit the digital newsroom market of the future with the network of its Newsbox nonlinear editor, Storybox journalist server and powerful Clipbox server, which can be configured for both in-plant transport and "playout" to air (for programing or commercials).

While competitors in the news editing and server markets might label Quantel as a post-production supplier, Taylor sees getting into hard-news editing and commercial playout as a "logical extension" of Quantel's proven still-store and networking products for broadcasters. He says Quantel will continue its digital motto: Start with a clean sheet of paper and design for the future.

"Digits are being used to merely emulate what is being done in the analog world," Taylor says. "If you have a display that looks like a tape recorder, then yes, anybody who is used to using a tape recorder can feel comfortable with that. But is that actual progress? We say that it's not. What you want to do is to look at what that person is actually trying to achieve and make it the easiest thing in the world." —GD

DEATHS

Harry Kramer, 84, former CBS staff announcer, died Jan. 23 in Sarasota. Fla. Kramer was the voice of CBS for many years. From 1962 to 1971 he introduced the CBS Evening News with Walter Cronkite. He announced special reports, documentaries, political conventions, elections, space flights and assassinations. Other regular assignments included CBS Weekend News and 60 Minutes. During the '50s Kramer's baritone began The Red Buttons Show and the daytime drama The Edge of Night on CBS Television, and Mr. Keene, Tracer of Lost Persons and Our Gal Sunday on the CBS Radio Network. He also hosted a musical radio quiz show, Hits and Misses. Kramer is survived by his wife, Ruth; three children, and eight grandchildren.

Jack Gaines, 78, retired producer, died Jan. 14 of a heart attack in Hollywood, Fla. Gaines started his broadcasting career in 1940 at WNYC(FM) New York as a continuity and news writer. He joined the Office of War Information in 1941 as a producer of radio news and propaganda broadcasts. After World War II Gaines joined the Voice of America as a producer. After VOA was absorbed into the State Department, Gaines became a producer with the United States Information Agency. He retired in 1993. Gaines is survived by two children, Richard and Susan, and three grandchildren.

Sources say Twentieth Television's reality strip America's Most Wanted: Final Justice will not be coming back for a second season in the fall. The show, which offered updates to cases covered on the longrunning Fox series, has averaged a 3 national Nielsen rating. A Twentieth spokesperson said the studio would await the February sweeps before making any official decision.

Capital Cities/ABC Inc. will pay approximately $25 million for U.S. broadcast rights to the 1998 World Cup soccer tournament in France, almost double what was paid to broadcast the 1994 event. The deal, not yet finalized, is between ABC and the Federation Internationale de Football Association. The deal calls for ABC to televise 12 games and Capital Cities/ABC owned ESPN and ESPN2 the other 52 games in the expanded tournament.

United Video Satellite Group Inc. shareholders voted to adopt approve the merger with Tele-Communications Inc.

announced last July. The deal calls for UVSG, a provider of satellitedelivered video, audio and data services, to remain a separate, publicly traded affiliate of TCI.

Invoking the fine print of the 1992 Cable Act, Cablevision Systems Co. resumed carriage of wood-tv, an NBC affiliate in Grand Rapids, Mich., which owner LIN Television had yanked from the cable system two weeks ago. On Jan. 24 Cablevision restored the station without its owner's permission, claiming that LIN is violating FCC rules by being inconsistent in granting retransmission consent to two cable systems within the same area. Cablevision officials say wood-ty granted mustcarry status to Western Michigan University's EduCABLE, but not to Cablevision. As a result, Cablevision savs wood-TV forfeits the right to negotiate with it. LIN reportedly pulled woop-TV because Cablevision refused the broadcast owner's request to carry a vet-to-be developed weather channel for which Cablevision would be required to pay. Cablevision spokesman Charlie Schueler says Cablevison offered to put the weather channel on for two weeks and then take an independent survey to see whether subscribers wanted the channel.

UPN's new Tuesday programing lineup averaged a 6.3 Nielsen rating/9 share, putting the network fourth for the night that featured President Clinton's State of the Union address on ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox.

Evergreen may buy Detroit combo

Chancellor Broadcasting Co. has granted Evergreen Media Corp. an option to purchase wDFN(AM)-wwww-FM Detroit for $30 million. The deal is contingent, however, on Chancellor's first acquiring the stations from Shamrock Broadcasting. That deal is expected to close in first quarter 1996, according to Star Media Group broker Bill Steding.

In what is being described as an "advertising brokerage agreement" with Evergreen, Chancellor has agreed to sell the stations once it completes its acquisition of Shamrock stations as announced last year.

The stations would give Evergreen its third FM and second AM in the Detroit market (see "Changing Hands," page 32). Evergreen already owns wkol(FM) and wNIC(FM) Detroit and wDOZ(AM) (formerly wMTG), Dearborn, Mich.

Capital Cities/ABC's Tom Murphy received NATPE's Lifetime Achievement Award last Tuesday (Jan. 23) at the convention's opening general session. Murphy was introduced by former NBC chairman Grant Tinker, who said, "It is a great privilege to be part of any tribute to Tom Murphy." Murphy, who praised programers for the essential part they play in the industry, said of his career that "my only regret is that I can't do it all over again."

FCC gets raise

The FCC won some money back from Congress last week. The continuing resolution signed by lawmakers funds the commission for fiscal 1996 at $175.7 million—the mark agreed on earlier by a conference of House and Senate lawmakers. The level is about $10 million more than the previous resolution gave the commission, but FCC Chairman Reed Hundt has said the commission will still need more funding to implement new telecommunications legislation.

Gotcha!

Fox's America's Most Wanted has scheduled a sweeps special for Feb. 3 to celebrate the show's 400th capture. The show actually had 399 captures at press time, but felt confident—with all fingers crossed—that they would have the 400th by airdate. The odds are in their favor, with the show averaging more than one apprehension per week. Three and a half years ago, the show planned a 200th-capture May sweeps special. By airdate, the number was 205.

Commissioners get Disney recommendation

Disney last week moved closer to FCC approval of its acquisition of CapCities/ABC. FCC commissioners late Friday received the Mass Media Bureau's recommendation on the Disney–CapCities/ABC merger (which industry sources expect will be an approval). The item could make Wednesday's meeting agenda if commissioners have no problems with it, but otherwise it will be considered at the Feb. 8 meeting, commission sources say.

LAS VEGAS

Tammy fan

The circus on the floor of NATPE '96 in Las Vegas was more minimus than maximus compared with previous years, veteran NATPE attendees say. But the gathering did have its moments. One of the oddest had to be the sight of daytime's newest sensation, Rosie O'Donnell, hotfooting it from the Warner Bros, spread down to the Worldvision booth to meet Tammy Fave Messner. It seems O'Donnell had seen Worldvision's Jim J, and Tammy Fave on Las Vegas's KUPN-TV and called her old comedy-circuit friend Jim J. Bullock to compliment him on the show. Worldvision had arranged for a special midnight run of the campy new talker during the convention. Said O'Donnell after shaking hands with Messner: "Tammy Faye Bakker to me is the funniest human on the planet. I can't wait to see more of that show."

Sunbeam on 'Deco Drive'

Sunbeam Television, owners of WSVN-TV Miami and WHDH-TV Boston, is talking with the Fox station group about picking up Deco Drive, a Sunbeam-produced lifestyle and entertainment show. Sunbeam wants to bring in Fox, or another station group, as a possible partner on the show and then consider a wider rollout.

Di Bona 'Shouting Match'

Vin Di Bona Productions, of America's Funniest Home Videos fame, is looking for a distributor (and possibly a broadcast partner) for Shouting Match, a half-hour of political satire designed as a late-night strip. "It's absolutely ready to go," says chairman Vin Di Bona. If all goes well, the show will debut this summer, several months before ABC is scheduled to place politically incorrect, an offcable political humor entry, on its latenight schedule. The success of one does not mean the failure of the other. Di Bona says. "There is definitely room for more than one."

NEW YORK

DirecPC on TV?

When Hughes Network Systems last week officially trumpeted the launch of its satellite-delivered computer video service, DirecPC, it may have foreshadowed a convergence with Hughes's DIRECTV venture. DirecPC, a project involving Hewlett-Packard and Starlight Networks, is intended to provide PCs on internal business networks with up to 99 video channels via cable connection to a 24-inch dish. The technology eventually will be marketed for residential use, and a Hughes source says announcements involving DIRECTV and DirecPC are in the offing. That could mean a convergence that would enable migration of Internet content to the TV screen.

WBIS+ dives into Media Pool

When the start-up New York superstation WBIS+ launches in April, it will be using a BTS Media Pool digital server for commercial playback, says Jim Scott, managing engineer for Wall Street Journal Television. The planned 24-hour business/entertainment channel, owned jointly by WSJTV parent Dow Jones and ITT, may also play back some short-form programing off the server in addition to promos and spots. Although the final configuration is still undecided, Scott says the Media Pool probably will be linked to an Odetics analog tape-based system.

COMMITTED TO THE FIRST AMENDMENT AND THE FIFTH ESTATE

The V for voluntary

The broadcasting industry must figure out what it is going to do about children's television. It is not enough to say it will stand pat. It is not enough to resist the chairman of the FCC and the President of the United States, nor all those in its audience who feel television is underserving the nation's youth, and thus the nation.

It is time for the National Association of Broadcasters and the major television networks and the principal groups to come up with a voluntary children's TV initiative that will make a difference. It can be a national workshop to produce the next Sesame Street. It can be a cooperative effort in every community to produce one special a week. It can be funding the local public station to create new programing for the 6-12-year-olds. It could be a quantitative commitment to broadcast a set number of hours per week (although that appeals to us least of all). There could be major-market commitments and smaller-market commitments. The critical considerations: It should be voluntary and it should be soon.

Let us hasten to add: It also is time for the chairman of the FCC and the President of the United States to be open to such voluntary initiatives; in the case of the Hundt FCC, that hasn't always been the case. (Yes, we know there is a law here, and a duty to enforce it. But surely there is discretion enough to cover the instant circumstances.) Assuming there is a meeting between the chief executive and the broadcasting industry on this subject, as he suggested in his State of the Union address, there could be no more splendid result than the President endorsing a broadcaster initiative and asking the FCC to defer a regulatory solution.

There is a critical balance between what the government can impose on a public trustee and what a public trustee does on its own. The genius of the American system of broadcasting is that the industry's own sense of fitness has generally preceded the government's goading. This is a time for first principles, not the First Amendment.

The V for vile

So long as the President is going to honor the broadcasting industry with such attention, perhaps he'll accept another piece of advice. Stay away from the V-chip. Don't be taken in by how innocent it looks as it leaves Mr. Markey's drawing board; it is the precursor of Big Brother.

Voluntary should be the guiding principle in your discussing sex and violence, too. Leave the V-chip where it belongs: outside the room.

Getting crowded up there

Those who think the marketplace model is better than the public trustee model got a sobering reality check last week: MCI's $682.5 million bid for the DBS spectrum, a figure roughly double what conventional wisdom expected. If that doesn't whet the appetites of the budget mavens going after the broadcasters' digital spectrum, nothing will.

But beyond the dollars represented, the import for the U.S. programing industry is awesome. There are now five domestic powers that be in direct broadcast satellites: Hughes (with AT&T), Hubbard, EchoStar and MCI (with Murdoch) in the high-power world, and Primestar in the medium-power Ku-band. A far cry from the day when you couldn't give away DBS spectrum.

At last, cable will have a major competitor to help keep its rates unregulated. Alas, those competitiors may beat prices into the ground.

That leaves terrestrial TV holding at least two aces: remaining the only free TV medium and the only local one. In mass media audience terms, that's still the hand to beat.
