Believe it or not, you could be in more trouble without him.

It's hard to believe that someone like Dennis can be relied on to do anything but cause trouble. But did you know Dennis the Menace has been a top-ten performer since his introduction in 1986? And he's not alone. Because The Program Exchange also features The Flintstones and The Woody Woodpecker Show—consistent topten performers for the last decade.

THIS WEEK

27 / PRICE OF WAR

By the time President Bush announced last week's cease-fire in the Middle East, the war was believed to have cost the three broadcast networks and CNN a collective $145 million in production costs and lost advertising revenue. But spending was not expected to stop there, as the networks found themselves busy mapping out strategies for continued coverage of developments in the region and wondering how soon skittish advertisers would return to the network schedules.

30 / FNN TO CNBC

NBC has signed a definitive agreement to buy the media assets of its chief competitor, Financial News Network, and plans to combine the two networks into one. That deal has effectively scuttled an agreement in principle FNN had with Dow Jones and Group W two weeks ago.

32 / GUARANTEES TO ADVERTISERS

NBC and CBS dropped their controversial PUT policies for traditional guarantees last week, saying that because the networks did not use traditional guarantees, as much as $100 million to $200 million went to other companies, such as Fox. ABC has not yet said whether it will drop the PUT plan (which was developed last June by NBC) for traditional guarantees, but most media buyers expect it will.

Kuwaiti women welcome allied troops into Kuwait City (page 27)

Media buyers were pleased by the news, but were not surprised.

In other marketing news last week, CBS named Joseph Abruzzese senior VP, CBS TV network sales. Jerome Dominus, senior VP, entertainment marketing and sales, was named senior VP, sales and media development.

32 / NEW PROPOSAL

The broadcast industry is in a quandary over how best to deal with the issues of must carry and retransmission consent. As a result, a new proposal has emerged— "I pay/you pay"—which would amend the Communications Act to give broadcasters the right to grant or withhold retransmission consent.

33 / WINNING SWEEP

CBS executives were buoyant last week after the network's first outright sweeps win in six years, which put CBS in a season-to-date tie for second place in prime time with ABC. A jovial CBS/Broadcast Group President Howard Stringer even did magic tricks for reporters before a briefing by CBS Research chief David Poltrack, who, Stringer said, needed extra time to reorganize his presentation because, for once, there was no need to "torture the numbers into submission." Poltrack believes CBS is now positioned to make a run at first place NBC next season.

35 / NETWORK RADIO: THE BUSINESS OF SERVICE

This Special Report looks at network radio programing and services, the fundamentals of station image. It examines the resurgence of news—both commercial and public and niche targeting as two trends in the industry.

46 / CRS: LIVE FROM NASHVILLE

Unistar's Ed Salamon talks about the country music format's growing strength as radio operators prepare for the upcoming Country Radio Seminar at the Opryland Hotel and Convention Center in Nashville.

47 / PREMIUM SITCOMS

Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution's offnetwork sales of Murphy Brown and Full House are each approaching 100 markets sold at what are considered to be premium cash license figures.

48 / PILOT CUTBACKS

As a means of cutting costs, TV networks will be ordering fewer pilots and more pilot presentations, and making better use of made-for-TV movies and specials as the basis for series, according to network development executives discussing the process by which network schedules are made.

52 / SPORTS SERVICES PLAY BALL

Several regional cable sports services that carried baseball for the first time last year are trying to increase their market share before the start of the Major League Baseball season, five weeks from now.

54 / LAUGHING MATTER

Comedy TV, now called CTV: The Comedy Network, reveals its programing schedule, which combines original and acquired programing from both Viacom's HA! and Time Warner's The Comedy Channel. They merge April 1.

54 / PPV HEAVYWEIGHT

Boxing remains cable's pay per view money winner. with one fight equal to three to four months of revenue generated from PPV movies. Along those lines. Showtime will officially begin its association with boxing promoter and former HBO ally Don King March 18, with a match between Mike Tyson and "Razor" Ruddock, in the first of what are to be quarterly "mega-fights."

56 / LARGER CONUS MAP

Conus Communications plans to kick off its Northeast regional cooperative, bringing the satellite newsgathering system closer to its goal of creating nine regional co-ops nationally by next summer. If all goes according to schedule, by July I co-op members will have access to more than six additional stories from their region on a daily basis.

57 / PARAMOUNT BROADCASTING

Paramount is wrapping up its acquisition of TVX Broadcast Group, giving the entertainment company six independent stations that reach almost 10% of the country. Last week, the TVX board approved Paramount's $9.50 pershare offer, and Paramount expected to have the deal-which, including consulting fees and expenses, comes to about $60 million-wrapped up by today (March 4). The proxy statement outlining the deal projects bullish growth for the station group through 1995.

63 / BROADCAST LENDING

Hogan & Hartson's petition asking the FCC to allow lenders to take a security third-party interest in an FCC license will likely increase the banking community's comfort zone, many believe. And that, in turn, may bring relief to broadcasters in need of a few dollars. Others. however, say the petition may undermine many assumptions inherent in broadcast lending.

64 / HYPERCAM

Sony will have integrated its sensitivity-enhancing Hyper HAD sensors into its entire line of CCD cameras in time for the 1991 National Association of Broadcasters convention. TSM, robotic camera system developer, pushes for improved interfaces for automated systems.

66 / AMPEX BOSS SPEAKS

Ed Bramson, owner, president and chief executive officer of Ampex Corp.. said the company is financially sound and not for sale, in spite of flat revenue and recent lavoffs. The lavoffs have ended, he said, and a rebound will follow the introduction of significant new TV products in 1992.

68 / INTERNATIONAL FOCUS

Tom Freston, MTV Networks chairman and CEO. said the growing international TV marketplace holds both "tremendous potential" and warnings for American TV suppliers. He said the breakdown of GATT talks may create a system where countries might establish their own rules regarding the importing and exporting of programing.

WASHINGTON

Chief to chief

History doesn't always repeat itself. It seems that President Reagan tried, albeit unsuccessfully, to sway Bush White House on fin-syn. According to well-placed source, Reagan wrote Bush late last year stating motion picture industry's case for preserving FCC's financial interest and syndication rules. Bush's response was that White House was going to stay away from debate and let FCC decide issue (point underscored in letter to Capitol Hill from White House chief of staff, John Sununu [BROADCASTING, Feb. 18]. In 1983, Reagan nixed planned repeal of rules by Mark Fowler FCC.

Opt in/opt out

Television Operators Caucus has its own ideas about dealing with issue of must carry/retransmission consent (see "Top of the Week"). TOC has discussed concept called "opt in/opt out," which would establish retransmission consent requirement giving broadcasters control over their signals, for which they could charge cable systems a retransmission fee. But stations would have another choice; they could "opt" for complete must-carry protection and forfeit any claims to retransmission fee.

More to come?

Success of National Public Radio's daily call-in show on Gulf crisis has sparked interest in series of call-in programs. Among possibilities for two-hour afternoon call-ins is one focusing on science hosted by former NPR science correspondent and developer of public TV's Newton's Apple, Ira Fla-tow.

Pay plans

ALL SMILES

Former ABC Chairman Leonard Goldenson (1), who helped lead ABC from 'little network that could'' status in the early 1950's to eventual parity, has a warm greeting for News Corp. chief executive Rupert Murdoch who, along with Fox Inc. president and CEO, Barry Diller (center), is hoping to repeat that success with his Fox network. Diller hosted a reception at the 20th Century Fox commissary celebrating 'Beating the Odds,'' a new book by Goldenson (BROADCASTING, Feb. 18) charting ABC's rise. Goldenson, 85, remains chairman Capcities/ABC's executive committee.

per-view Olympics was that affiliates would have plan for network promotions in hand in 60 days. At meeting, NBC affiliates aired concern that PPV Olympics promotions aired on NBC network would conflict with affiliates' own promotional attempts. Although affiliate distrust still remains, relations seem to be improving. PPV Olympics "are being more sensitive to our concerns now," said Jim Waterbury, co-chair affiliate promotion committee and president KwWL.

VIRGINIA BEACH

Fine print

With Paramount preparing to take control of Virginia Beach, Va.-based group owner TVX Broadcast Group (see story, page 57), question of whether offices will be moved to either New York or Hollywood was addressed in proxy statement outlining offer. Acquisition agreement states that if TVX executive is moved more than 35 miles from Virginia Beach office during next two years, executive can terminate his employment agreement without cause and receive all compensation and benefits under terms of agreement.

After merger is completed, TVX chairman Gene Loving and president John Trinder will each reveive $3.667,181 for their options. Chief financial officer Craig Kiger will receive $3.451,320. Loving's position of chairman will be eliminated when merger is completed and his future with company is unknown.

Paramount has employment agreements with Loving, Trinder and Kiger that runs through November 1993. For 1991, Loving and Trinder will receive base salary of $288,845, and Kiger will receive $231,076.

KOREA

Seoul mates

Korean electronics giant Samsung and Discovery Channel are to be programing partners in Korea and internationally. In deal to be signed in Seoul early this week between executives of Samsung unit Cheil Communications, South Korean's largest ad agency, and Discovery Senior Vice President James Rulmyr, companies will agree to cooperate in development and production of nonfiction programing. Although details of deal remained uncertain, one key prospect pending Korean government approval is provision by Cheil of Discovery documentary programing over pilot cable operation now in planning stages. Korea, currently with about 10 million TV households, is considered one of Pacific's fastest growing markets.

NEW YORK

Insurance

Agreement between CNBC and FNN is said to have break-up clause in event that FNN backs out of deal to accept higher offer. If counter offer exceeds CNBC's $105 million by $10 million or more, CNBC would walk away with at least $6 million. Some say FNN is desperate to keep bidding war alive to raise price closer to $150 million it is said to need to satisfy all debts. Group W and Dow Jones are said to be considering counter-offer of $120 million, but would likely want some equipment that CNBC agreement excluded. FNN said equipment has liquidation value of between $15 million and $20 million. Group W and Dow Jones' original offer of $90 million left FNN with all its equipment.

Budding authors?

Another "insider" book about television may be in works from couple of insiders who saw action from top—former NBC Chairman Grant Tinker, and former NBC executive vice president Bud Rukeyser, key adviser to Tinker. Last week, Tinker said reports that contract had already been signed to write book were untrue. "We have talked about it," Tinker reported. "It's really just a gleam in our eye at this point. It's not a formed plan, and there is no publisher."

Ill-fated feed

Problems with costs and logistics helped scuttle NBC's plans to provide 24-hour video feed from Persian Gulf, which was rendered moot anyway by war's end. NBC was looking at taking video feed from region, without audio or contextual news reporting, and placing it on satellite as public service offering to viewers.

Money talk

CNBC will be handing out $1 per subscriber to MSO's who signed up for network's subscriber acquisition incentive plan (SAP), even though it has signed deal to acquire FNN and its 35 million subscribers. CNBC had said in past that despite not reaching 10 million subscriber goal (network said it gained seven to eight million new subscribers), it might at some point decide to give out $3 per household. But now with FNN hopefully in bag, network said price per sub remains at $1.

GIBRALTAR

Rock hunters

Decision is expected at end of March on winning bid for Gibraltar Broadcasting, but rivals have more in mind than that Mediterranean nation's tiny 30,000 people. Bidders—said to include Italian media mogul Silvio Berlusconi, British broadcaster Central TV, Luxembourg's CLT and group involving U.S. media broker Communications Equity Associates—apparently are eyeing Costa del Sol, Spanish resort coast within reach of Gibraltar's TV and radio signals and host to more than 300,000 English-speaking British and Scandinavian expatriates, including retirees with disposable incomes.

DENVER

Cash crunch

TCI has not found it easy to refinance debt of Storer Cable, which it co-manages with Comcast. According to Bernard Schotters, TCI vice president, finance, Storer needs to refinance $500 million to $600 million debt (of overall $2 billion debt) because cash flow won't cover March 1992 repayment deadline, or much larger payment due December 1992. Storer junk bonds carry interest rates of 13% and more.

LOS ANGELES

New friends

Chris Thompson, creator of Bosom Buddies, which launched careers of Tom Hanks and Peter Scolari, is writing and producing another buddy comedy for ABC. Big Deals, set to star Tim Curry, will focus on two rogue friends always in search of quick deal. In production at Viacom Productions, project has been given pilot order from network.

KING SELLS TV, CABLE TO PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

K ing Broadcasting agreed in principle to sell its five TV stations and cable systems serving 200,000 subscribers to a joint venture of the Providence Journal Co. and Kelso & Co., a New York-based merchant banking firm for an undisclosed price believed to be well over $400 million. Still remaining to be sold are King's six radio stations and a mobile television production operation.

The Providence Journal Co., through subsidiary Colony Communications, owns cable systems serving roughly 500,000, some of them in Southern California adjacent or near King Videocable systems. King's other major cable systems are in Northern California and Minnesota. The Providence Journal Co. also owns four TV stations: two Fox affiliates, one NBC and one ABC affiliate. The King TV stations being purchased are three NBC, one CBS and one Fox affiliate: KHNL(TV) Honolulu, KGW-TV Portland, Ore.; KING-TV Seattle and KREM-TV Spokane, both Washington, and KTVB-TV Boise, Idaho. King also has a low-power TV station in Twin Falls, Idaho. This represents the first media acquisition for Kelso, which in recent years has helped take private several public companies, including American Standard.

At least one contender for the King properties was Nationwide Communications, which had put in a bid for the TV and radio stations.

A small market radio commentary from Dr. Sammy Parker, Murray (Ky.) State University

n the academic environment, researchers often fall victim to the socalled "law of the hammer." The researchers use their "pet" statistical tool for every situation. In effect, you might say that whatever is wrong with the car engine, just get your hammer and fix it. Often the end result is research data that is not as meaningful or as useful, and at worst is highly misleading.

As a former owner and manager for 12 years of an AM stand-alone and later FM combo. I am suggesting that small market AM radio programing has also fallen victim of a type of "law of the hammer" thinking. Over the years small market programers and managers have developed programing concepts and ideas that reflected the very successful major markets strategies and techniques. Often this was done without questioning their validity for use in small market situations. Their attitude has been one of "if it works there, it'll work here." Although large market programing is usually well suited to the metro audience. most small market AM stations have not thought out the implications of such wholesale adoption of these ideas. We are suggesting that small markets, for all practical purposes. develop programing concepts and ideas that are the exact opposite of most large market stations. While program directors of larger market stations must continually narrow and refine their on-air sound, the smaller markets must develop a "global com-munity view." This approach allows the smaller market radio station to include many different segments of community programing to meet listeners' wants and needs.

Why and how do some small market radio staions in towns of less than 25,000 people develop gross revenues of $1 million or more each year, while large numbers of other similar stations do less than $350,000? The answer seems to be in the willingness of owners and managers to take time to establish a firm foundation of programing and management priciples.

No one can doubt the serious plight of today's small market AM radio station. Serious audience erosion, decline in gross revenue and managers-owners whose personal uncertainty about how to respond to crises makes AM radio's future uncertain at best. Owners, managers, sales managers and programers must move forward and "reframe" much of their thinking and their perspectives about AM small market programing and management. Reframing simply means to look at the situation from other view points.

Specifically, small market stations need to do the following:

• Change radio's image to a basic advertising medium like that of the local newspaper.

Change programing to a concept of service, community events, local news and special event broadcasts, with less emphasis on music-driven concepts.

Program defensively with respect to music.

Raise advertising rates to reflect value.

• Market, sell and service a regional area if possible.

Invest in the latest equipment and tools.

• Hire and train the best people possible.

Eliminate heavy reliance on most sales promotions.

If small market radio advertising could be viewed as a basic advertising medium by the local business community it would greatly increase station revenues and profits. However, if we continue selling one promotion after another, it may be hard to establish that needed identity. In fact, the business community usually says: "When you get another great promotion like this one, come back and see me." So it's hard to establish radio as a basic advertising medium.

AM stations also need to eliminate—or at least critically examine—many of their programs and programing concepts. Why, you ask? If you look at today'shigh gross, financially successful small market stations, you'll quickly discover several striking similarities. For example, you'll see programing targeted to listeners' real needs. The results of this type of programing are clear and decisive in both revenues and loyal listeners. Give the community the programing that it wants and de-

"Owners, managers and programers must move forward and "reframe" their thinking about small market radio." at it wants and demands. We need to stop doing what the larger markets do just because it seems to work there, and do what small market radio can do best. Community programing should provide needed infomation and services, raise awareness, promote local events and communicate—that's AM's strongest asset. When local programs are broadcast, community information is presented and lives are touched. Then local radio programing can only be the envy of other media.

Management must develop a strong sense of mission with a theoretical framework to support practical decisionmaking. Management must learn the whys of AM programing or perhaps fade from the media scene like black and white movies. Never in recent history has it been so critical for small market owners to be able to supply the leadership and innovation needed if AM radio is to survive and thrive. Time must be spent evaluating, organizing, developing and planning management strategies. Radio staions can fool themselves, but not the public. Provide your community with programing that meets needs and offers services, and you'll find that selling radio advertising will be fun.

QUELLO BOOSTER

EDITOR: This is a critical moment for broadcasting and, in particular, for radio. For any number of reasons, times are difficult and becoming even more complex. We are facing significant change in the basic structure of our industry. Now more than ever, we and the public need a regulatory body that has an in-depth understanding of the issues and their long-term impact.

As you may be aware. FCC Commissioner James H. Quello's term is expiring. He has made it known that he will accept reappointment and continue to serve as a commissioner.

There are a number of compelling reasons why we should support his reappointment. To name but a few:

Experience—17 years on the commission gives him a grasp of the issues

■ Independence—Jim Quello has proven he is his own man and calls it as he sees it.

■ Fairness—His behavior as a commissioner could be characterized as a good listener, open to the facts and wise in his judgment, benefiting both the public interest and the broadcasters that serve it.

Perhaps most important however, Jim Quello brings an experienced, practical, real world broadcaster's perspective to the FCC. He possesses rare common sense, the ability to see the long-range impact of the complex and far reaching ideas being proposed.

As a broadcaster. I feel it is important to have Jim Quello on the commission.

If you agree, I urge you to write a letter of recommendation on his behalf, today, to President Bush, with copies to:

Mr. Chase Untermeyer, Director of Presidential Personnel, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20500, and The Honorable John H. Sununu, Chief of Staff to the President, The White House, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvanis Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20500—Herbert M. Levin, senior vice president. WADO(AM) New York.

BEST FOOTE FORWARD

EDITOR: It pleases me to see in the Feb. 11 BROADCASTING the picture of Dr. Joe Foote receiving the Frank Stanton Fellow award at the International Radio and Television Society seminar for broadcasters in educaton. Dr. Foote, former press secretary to Senator Carl Albert. has not only distinguished himself as chairman of the Department of Radio-Television at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, but he wrote a very insightful book on the relationship between the three major television networks, the presidency and congress. Network lobbyists and broadcasters would have a better understanding of our challenges if they were to read "Television Access and Political Power: The Networks, the Presidency and The Loyal Opposition."-Ralph E. Becker, president and chief operating officer, Television Station Partners, Greenwich, Conn.

THE PRICE OF FREEDOM

EDITOR: Boy! I really hate to argue with you guys, particularly when it comes tomatters of freedom of speech and the press. Your editorial in the Feb. 11 issue ("Television's Own War") does, however, require some comment.

To put it in the proper perspective, this nation is, like it or not, at war. The policy of the government, properly debated and Constitutionally supported, is to wage the war. It is the responsibility of the military to implement that policy. Those facts are indisputable. It also appears to be indisputable that the policy of the media is to wage war on the military. That the military is quite capable of dealing with that absurd circumstance seems to be the bone of contention. Why? Why should the men and women who are putting their lives on the line allow themselves to be coerced and compromised by a handful of "camp followers'' whose only demonstrated goal is to undermine and demean their efforts in search of self aggrandizement?

No, I'm afraid FCC Commissioner James Quello is right on. The media has, in fact, emphasized the negative, trivialized the military effort, questioned the reason for our involvment and repeated. ad nauseam, every fragement of information that they suppose supports their own private little war effort. Quello is also right when he says the public will no longer believe (or support) that kind of press. I don't know about ArnettBrokawJenningsRather, but if Murphy-TischTurnerWright think they are making friends out there among the great unwashed masses, they just aren't reading the "letters to the editor."

Like the editors of BROADCASTING, I am saddened by all of this because I see our press freedom surely and inexorably being eroded. But unlike you, I do not believe it is the current level of censorship that is the cause of the erosion. I believe it is the arrogance and irresponsibility of those who pretend to be the caretakers of that freedom that will ultimately destroy it.

Free speech and freedom of the press, like all the other freedoms we enjoy, cannot exist separate and apart from the responsibility such freedoms impose on individuals and institutions alike. To suggest you can have one without the other is, in the final analysis, the greatest threat to both.—Joe Meier, broadcaster (retired), St. George, Utah.

PLAYING IT STRAIGHT

EDITOR: So some network news correspondents are unhappy with the prospect of being news reporters, rather than selfstyled "experts" in any field they happen to be covering. The steady deterioration of the news media in its ability to inform the public impartially as to what is happening in a given situation began several decades ago when it felt the necessity to analyze what news events meant rather than report the unbiased facts.

Those of us with some measure of expertise acquired over most of a lifetime have often winced at the simplistic explanations usually fraught with gross error given by media reporters while attempting to analyze subjects touching our own fields of knowledge. To their credit, network executives are apparently beginning to realize that their correspondents cannot be instant experts and are enlisting the aid of retired high-ranking military career officers to provide analysis as the Persian Gulf war progresses.

Who wouldn't prefer to accept the analysis of a knowlegeable retired general than that of Dan Rather, whose comments cannot be considered unbiased by any reasonable measure. Let us hope the trend continues, but with recognition of the expert's credentials.

Stuart Loory laments that the network have failed to provide what he calls 'perspective'' in covering the war, due in large part to what he characterizes as military control over media coverage. Did we not learn 20-odd years ago that unbridled signaling of our plans and intentions to our enemy aided and abetted his cause? Let the media exercise restraint, allow the military to execute the war, and try to recognize the fact that the people of this country can understand that the military is not telling them everything, just as they understand that the highly censored reports from Baghdad protect Iraq's interests.

Give them the unadorned facts, accurately attributing the source, and you may be surprised to discover that people can actually think.—Richard L. Kennedy, R.L. Kennedy & Associates, Waynesville, N.C.

WAR TAKES ITS TOLL ON NETWORKS

ABC, NBC, CBS, CNN tally price of war coverage, said to be more than $145 million; in last week's ground battle media gets dramatic footage by circumventing military press pools ednesday's cease-fire ended weeks of war in the Persian Gulf. But coverage of the conflict, which by last week was believed to have cost the four networks togethermore than $145 million over seven months, was far from over. Still to be resolved were network strategies for continued coverage of the region and luring back skittish advertisers to the network schedules.

"There are still a lot of things to cover, certainly in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Baghdad," said John Arrowsmith, ABC News foreign news director. The networks at press time were in the process of reevaluating the size of their staffs in the regions, with one network source estimating a 50% reduction in manpower in upcoming weeks.

"We are not just dropping this story," said Tom Johnson, CNN president. The cable network cut back staffing last week, he said, but has kept about 100 staffers in the region to focus on the rebuilding of the area.

Coverage continues despite the high cost of reporting from the region. Pro- duction costs in covering the Persian Gulf have averaged upwards of $1.5 million per broadcast network each week, on top of each network's annual news budget of $260 million to $350 million. When calculated along with revenue lost by advertiser resistance to war programing, the three commercial broadcast networks have lost an estimated $125 million on their coverage. CNN has estimated its own loss to be about $18 million through February.

When the war first broke out-according to a memo issued by NBC News, the network in one day alone lost $5 million in advertising revenue. ABC and CBS, which at the time also ran very little advertising, probably-suffered similarlosses. Such network ad revenue losses tied to the war were estimated to be down to under $500,000 per week by the middle of the war.

But lost advertising revenue once again skyrocketed when the ground war broke Feb. 23. One network executive said each of the three networks probably lost at least $1 million to $2 million that weekend and at least another $1 million each during the Feb. 27 prime time ad dress by President George Bush. Those advertisers requesting that spots be pulled if the network switched into war coverage were replaced by a second string of advertisers at a bargain rate, according to the source.

Now, with the war about over, network executives are hopeful advertisers will return. However, they don't anticipate a return until the second quarter, at the earliest. Said NBC's Larry Hoffner, executive vice president, network sales: "Advertisers are starting to show signs of life and are getting more active."

One factor that has to be considered when figuring out war-related losses is the fact that every show preempted is one less licensing fee that has to be paid, said Jay Nelson, analyst, Brown Brothers Harriman & Co. "There is a misconception that if you lost $2 million in revenue, you lost $2 million in profit," said Nelson.

On the reporting side, journalists in ` the region last week found that the restrictive military-organized press pools, which were a source of consternation among reporters since the war began, were suddenly gone. Following the U.S. announcement of a cease-fire, the combat pools quickly disbanded and correspondents found themselves in the position of becoming "unilateral" reporters. "The situation is more than a little bit confused." said Mitch Davis, producer for ABC News special events and for media-organized pool coverage of the war. "We've got a lot of eggs juggling in the air right now."

But-unilateral reporting was not entirely new to the networks, which, just prior to the cease-fire, had begun to circumvent the Pentagon pools with an aggressive line-up of peripatetic correspondents. Unilateral coverage last week marked what many critics perceived as a "bouncing back" of the broadcast networks, and CBS News in particular, in covering the war

CBS News correspondent Bob McKeown, a veteran Canadian broadcast journalist who joined the network just six months ago, emerged last week as one of the most successful of the unilateral correspondents (see below). McKeown had two major scoops in covering the conflict: a Feb. 23 audio report from near the Kuwaiti border—the first uncensored live report from the battlefield and, just three days later, at 10:19 a.m. Tuesday, the first live pictures from Kuwait City.

As a result, CBS News, which had

GOING LIVE FROM THE FRONT LINES

The most dramatic pictures of the brief ground campaign, many observers thought, came from CBS News and ABC News crews that broke from the Pentagon's press pools, followed Saudi and Egyptian tanks into Kuwait and rolled into Kuwait City ahead of the allied forces. From almost the very beginning of the ground battle on Feb. 23, correspondents Bob McKeown and Richard Threlkeld of CBS and Forrest Sawyer of ABC were reporting live from the front lines.

Before the war, none of the networks predicted live television from the pools on the front. "To do that you would have to set up a microwave situation and I guarantee you in a combat situation, I don't want to be the guy setting up the microwave on a sand dune," Bob McFarland, NBC deputy news director. told BROADCASTING in early January.

The solution was to leave the pools. Rather than attempting to load microwave equipment onto the military's humvees, the ABC and CBS crews organized caravans of their own pickup trucks and minivans loaded with flyaway satellite uplink systems, crews of six to eight, including producers, camera and sound people, uplink technicians and other support personnel.

Like the armies they were following, the broadcasters had to deal with supply lines. "One of the things that is a problem [in Kuwait] is that there's no power, there's no fuel for the vehicles, there's no food, there's no water and there's no sanitation," said ABC News Vice President Bob Murphy.

Sawyer, ABC officials said, had developed close contacts within the Saudi and Egyptian military. He camped with Egyptian troops stationed on the Saudi-Kuwait border and reported from there on Feb. 12. On Feb. 19, the Saudi air force gave Sawyer the second seat during an F-15 mission. When the ground war began, Sawyer was welcomed into the Saudi and Egyptian ranks as they advanced along the Persian Gulf coast toward Kuwait City.

McKeown's crew followed about the same route, independently skipping between Saudi, Egyptian and other allied units. But they had not been expected. "The soldiers were more amazed than anything else to see these guys get out of their trucks and start doing a news report," said CBS spokesman Tom Goodman.

By 10:19 a.m. ET last Tuesday (Feb. 26) McKeown was reporting live from Kuwait City, arriving there while the allied army was still several miles away. Sawyer, also well ahead of all but a few coalition reconnaissance units, was in Kuwait City at about noon, but his green, nightscope image did not appear on screen until ABC's evening newscast at 5:45 p.m. CNN's Charles Jaco and Brian Jenkins and NBC's Brad Willis arrived several hours later. NBC's Kuwait City coverage Tuesday night was audio only.

McKeown and Sawyer also reported throughout Tuesday from Kuwait City on CBS Radio and ABC Radio respectively. Associated Press correspondent John King, reporting for AP Broadcast Services, arrived in Kuwait City on Tuesday but was unable to establish a link with the U.S. His taped reports were uplinked from Saudi Arabia the following day. Unistar Radio Networks aired CNN and pool reports.

Meanwhile, Threlkeld was covering troop movements to the west of Kuwait City and uplinking video of surrendering Iraqi troops—some of them surrendering to his camera crew. Iraqi soldiers also surrendered to Westwood One correspondent Liz Colton in Kuwait City on Tuesday. been criticized for its lackluster performance at the start of the war, last week suddenly found itself making headlines. The network overshadowed CNN, which had earlier dominated the headlines with its exclusive live coverage from Baghdad at the start of the war and with correspondent Peter Amett as the only U.S. reporter permitted to remain in the Iraqi city throughout most of the war.

"While CNN reaped a harvest of praise for its war coverage in the first weeks of the conflict, it was less impressive over the weekend." wrote critic Tom Shales in The Washington Post Feb. 25. "When all it can do is hopscotch its correspondents, it seems mediocre in comparison to the high-priced talent on the competing networks."

CNN's Johnson said CBS News did "uncommonly well" on reporting from Kuwait City, while the cable network's Charles Jaco was held at a Saudi checkpoint.

"There were moments of achievement for all the networks," said Johnson. "I really think that broadcast journalism reached new levels of excellence during this period, no matter how fierce the competition was through all of it."

The Pentagon itself was said to have-called CBS News on Tuesday night to commend the network's performance, according to an executive in the division. Pentagon spokesman Robert Hall said he was not aware of any call-made specifically to CBS News, but said last week that all of the networks had done a "great job" in covering the ground war.

"If you measure simply by firstest with the mostest, CBS made a comeback." said Everett Dennis, executive director of the Gannett Foundation Media Center. But he added that a particular news division's ability to "scoop" another network should not be the only criteria in measuring quality. Dennis commended each of the networks for overall coverage of the war.

"My feeling all along has been that ABC for reasons of general competence and enormous depth has been exemplary," said Dennis. "But the distance between any of the networks is very, very close."

While network executives prior to the cease-fire gave their unilateral correspondents the go-ahead to go into battle, there remained the spectre of missing CBS News correspondent Bill Simon and crew, reportedly held in Baghdad since disappearing without military escort near occupied Kuwait Jan. 21-

"We gave pause to what happened to the Simon crew, but we feel strongly that independent coverage of this war is necessary," said CBS News vice president Joe Peyronnin. He said CBS News was careful to send experienced war correspondents as its unilateral reporters.

Peyronnin, who helped form the press pool system during the Grenada conflict. said he still had faith in military-organized pools during war. "But what we have never been able to do is implement it in such a way that journalists can report from the front line."

The ground combat pools were proying to be problematic for networks because their correspondents would be unreachable for periods lasting as long astwo or three days, said NBC's David Miller, director of foreign news. "We had no continuity with the people once they got into the pools."

NBC News did not send correspondent Brad Willis into Kuwait until late Monday, and the network's first live report from Kuwait City appeared as an audio report on Tuesday's evening news. Miller said the network was reluctant to send unilateral reporters into the region earlier because of the potential

CNN'S PLACE IN HISTORY

This organization has been tested unlike any other group of people in the history of television journalism," said CNN President Tom Johnson last week, on the first day of postwar coverage from the Persian Gulf. "CNN has been ground zero for critics, for colleagues, for viewers, for families, for the military, for the newsmakers and the news haters."

"The people here have made news policies and decisions that have never been faced by journalists prior to this time. For so much of this there were no guidebooks, there were few rules and there were a lot of professional land mines.

"In a way I've felt CNN has written a new book, many times live, working without a script, and I felt that CNN served its profession and its viewers with distinction during this time."

CNN has also gone a long way towards providing higher visibility for the cable industry with its war coverage. MSO's have cited increased call volume in the early days of the war, as noncable viewers wanted access to CNN. The extent of CNN's influence to overall cable penetration figures won't be known for months, but MSO's say it will be a factor.

CNN's ratings have jumped between two- and three-fold since the war began, and network executives hope that many viewers will stay, making CNN a regular habit. "It probably did a lot to alter viewing habits," said Newhouse Broadcasting President Robert Miron. "It taught a lot of people that at 8 and 10 p.m. you can catch a full newscast."

Aside from the high ratings. Turner executives are pleased that a large number of CNN viewers were from the 18-34 demographic, exposing a new generation to a news service that has traditionally skewed older. The war coverage may also have the intangible effect of closing the price-value gap that some subscribers say exists between the amount they pay and what they perceive as the value of their cable service.

"This was a special situation for CNN," said Johnson, who addressed CNN's role in the world and responded to criticism about its coverage. "CNN is a global news network. It was especially important to us to try to tell all sides to this story from the Pentagon and the coalition to the Iraqi side. We did it with as much impartiality, with as much openness as we could. It was very difficult to do because we were clearly under controls, and they were different controls in Tel Aviv, Baghdad or in the Saudi desert. It was the most controlled war that this country's ever experienced. It also was the first time that live TV has been so much a part of it. I'm very proud of the CNN report throughout. I understand those who would criticize us, but I also believe that we had a duty to do and we did it as well as we know how. And to those who said: 'Why are you in Baghdad?' we felt we had to report that side of the story. We noted we were under Iraqi censorship. We've also noted it on the screen and in our scripts. We have never misrepresented the conditions under which that was gathered and reported.

As to the role of Peter Arnett, reporting from Baghdad, Johnson said: "I think we were very fortunate to have on site, in the most difficult of circumstances, a seasoned combat correspondent who was tested time and time again. He's received the highest honors that journalism could bestow and as imperfect, as restricted, as dangerous as conditions were there, I think that he was there so that all the viewers could be there and see as much as we could see." danger involved, particularly considering the mysterious disappearance of CBS News's Simon and crew. "There is not any story worth getting killed for," said Miller.

On the ratings front, CBS News, leading into a successful week of reporting, had actually picked itself up from third place in the network evening news race for the first time since the outbreak of war Jan. 16. For the week ending Feb. 24, CBS's 10.3/18 edged out the 10.2/18 by NBC Nightly News with Tom Brokaw. ABC's World News Tonight with Peter Jennings continued to lead with 11.9/21.

CBS News's successful week of coverage arrived on the heels of a shake-up at the division, which last month found CBS Evening News with Dan Rather executive producer Tom Bettag replaced by CBS This Morning executive producer Erik Sorenson. Along with the removal of Bettag, CBS News replaced veteran staffers Bill Crawford, who has spent 30 years with the network, most recently as senior broadcast producer of the evening news, and Lee Townsend, who was removed as news editor of CBS Evening News after 24 years with the network.

Peyronnin acknowledged that CBS News had a "bad night" on the first night of the war, but added: "The New York Giants lost four games this year and won the Super Bowl; that's a perfect analogy to this organization."

FNN CHANGES ITS MIND, SELLING TO CNBC

Cable network backs out of plan to sell to Dow Jones-Group W, opts for higher bid

NBC has signed a definitive agreement to buy the media assets of its chief competitor, Financial News Network, and plans to combine the two networks into one.

That deal has effectively scuttled an agreement in principle FNN had reached with Dow Jones and Group W three weeks ago with a reported price tag of $90 million (BROADCASTING, Feb. 18). The CNBC bid has been publicly released as $105 million in cash, but does not include the equipment that Dow Jones-Group W had agreed to buy. FNN co-CEO Alan Hirschfield says that hardware is valued at an additional $15 million-$20 million, meaning FNN's media assets now might bring in $120 million-$125 million. Dow Jones and Group W, which are "extremely disturbed," are not walking away, and say they may be prepared to overbid NBC.

NBC's price for FNN, plus the nearly $13 million from the intended sale of The Learning Channel to The Discovery Channel, still is not enough to cover FNN's liabilities. It has prepared to go into bankruptcy, perhaps as early as last Friday (March 1). The deal is scheduled to close in about 60 days, and at that time the integration of FNN and CNBC into one channel is expected to take place. In the meantime, an integration team is being set up by CNBC President Al Barber, comprised of both FNN and CNBC executives. NBC said it hasn't yet decided what the new entity will be called. NBC is trying to figure out "how we balance those two and come up with a single identity," said Tom Rogers, president, NBC Cable and Business Development. "The name FNN has a lot of value.'

Also announced last week was that Cablevision Systems is going to transfer its 49.5% ownership in CNBC to NBC should the deal with FNN go through. If it does not go through, Cablevision will retain its stake in CNBC. William Bell, Cablevision vice chairman, told analysts at a media conference in New York two weeks ago that the MSO was taking steps to cut its investment in Rainbow Programing Holdings, its joint programing venture with NBC, which includes CNBC.

Dow Jones and Group W refuse to give up on making FNN theirs and sent a letter to FNN's board of directors indicating their displeasure with the events. They asked to see NBC's offer before bankruptcy is filed, and want a chance, which they said they were never offered, to counterbid. FNN so far has not said it is going to meet Dow Jones-Group W's request.

The offer from NBC came on Friday, Feb. 22, and NBC set a deadline of 11 p.m. the following Monday (Feb. 25) for FNN's response. "We understood that until FNN had a definitive agreement we could put in a bid," said Rogers.

Dow Jones and Group W got wind of the bid on Monday, and asked to attend the FNN board meeting scheduled to vote on NBC's offer, but were refused. "We feel we were excluded from what was supposed to be an auction process," said Donald Mitzner, president, Group W Satellite Communications. FNN claims it could not have notified Dow Jones-Group W of the NBC bid before the definitive agreement with NBC was signed. "We would have had to risk this deal to go back to Group W and Dow Jones for a counter offer," said FNN's Hirschfield, who acknowledged that another company could come back in with a bid during the bankruptcy process. CNBC's offer becomes a matter of public record once FNN goes into bankruptcy, and conceivably Dow Jones and Group W might jump in then, said Mitzner. NBC, at least publicly, remains unconcerned. "We expect the bankruptcy court to approve our bid," said Rogers.

FNN and Dow Jones-Group W had expected to sign the definitive agreement late last week, two days after the NBC deal was announced. Mitzner said all issues had been cleared up the same day NBC put in its offer. One sticking point during FNN and Dow Jones-Group W discussions, though, was getting a guarantee on cable affiliate contracts. One source said NBC requested no such guarantee, although since CNBC has been FNN's competitor, it is likely they were aware of FNN's subscriber claims.

Mitzner would not comment on the possibility of filing a lawsuit against FNN. Given the network's bleak financial picture, such a suit would likely be aimed not at a monetary settlement, but at stopping the NBC sale.

Dow Jones and Group W say they are also contemplating starting their own financial news cable service, but Mitzner would not give any details.

Since no agreement was signed with Dow Jones-Group W, there is no breakup penalty, as there is in the CNBC deal. Hirschfield would only say NBC

PERSPECTIVE ON THE NEWS CNBC AND THE RIGHT THING

You're nuts if you don't buy it." That free advice to NBC Cable President Tom Rogers concerning FNN came from one top cable operator, but could have come from any of a hundred.

The cable consensus held that NBC had to purchase FNN and merge it with the struggling CNBC if the network hoped to carve out a prominent place in cable's future. If NBC had allowed FNN to slip away to the other serious suitors, Group W and Dow Jones, the cable sages said, CNBC might well have slipped into permanent second-class status.

NBC also needed something to revitalize NBC President Robert Wright's flagging "new media" strategy. Along with Rogers, Wright set out four years ago to break out of the broadcasting business and into other media, particularly cable. They have aggressively implemented the strategy, but thus far it has shown lackluster results.

An ambitious probe into direct broadcast satellites, Sky Cable, rose and fell within 12 months, and alienated most of the cable industry in the process. SportsChannel America is struggling under the weight of a National Hockey League contract (negotiated before NBC arrived), and may very well turn into a lower cost, sports news service. After a rocky start, NBC's pay-per-view plans for the 1992 summer Olympics are getting better grades from operators, but significant hurdles remain, such as trapping for nonaddressable systems, channel space and revenue splits. CNBC, dogged by slow growth stemming from tight channel capacity and operators' memories of Sky Cable, was reaching a pivotal crossroads when its larger rival, FNN, went on the block.

Despite the cable industry's view, NBC's Tom Rogers disagrees with the premise that FNN was a must buy for CNBC. "We didn't see it that way," he said, pointing to the other growth alternatives CNBC was considering. (Among them, a subscriber incentive plan under which CNBC would have paid MSO's $3 per subscriber to add the service. which could have cost CNBC $30 million had it reached its goal of 10 million.) In the end, CNBC made a $105 million counter-offer to FNN, which will amount to a little more than $4 per subscriber for the 25 million unduplicated homes CNBC could pick up. "We decided that this was the best way to build our distribution, to take a startup service and firmly establish it as a major cable network," Rogers said.

But NBC may be paying the price this year for what it did in Washington last year. The company was a driving force behind the creation of Sky Cable last February, but the venture ultimately collapsed with the various partners retreating from the high costs and risks involved. NBC's involvement with the medium alienated a lot of cable operators, who see DBS as a competitive threat and who did not appreciate NBC's effort to pass legislation forcing cable programers to distribute via DBS, an issue as dear to the hearts of cable operators as any. Rogers acknowledges that cable operators and NBC did not see eye to eye on Sky Cable, but says in the end, NBC was on cable's side in pushing for a reasonable cable bill. "That particular episode has been put behind us," he said, while pointing to NBC's effective competition comments at the FCC squarely on the side of cable. But "people have long memories," said one cable observer. Dropping program access demands didn't earn NBC instant credibility within the industry, he said.

CNBC launched in April 1989 with 13 million homes, which CNBC executives said would be reached over the next several months. Today, the service stands at 17 million homes, with most of its growth a product of the rollout of its original affiliation agreements. Its subscriber incentive plan fell short of its goal, after several postponements, and until its potential buy of FNN it has not been able to make large strides in carriage.

It appears likely that SportsChannel America, in the last year of a money-losing $53 million, three-year deal with the National Hockey League, will convert to a sports news service if it does not renew its NHL deal. SCA never achieved the widespread distribution it needed to make the NHL deal work. Rogers said SCA's main goal has always been to buy programing its regionals couldn't afford, and that "any other distribution is gravy." Sports news would lower costs at the network and place it much closer to breakeven. There are also reports that SportsChannel and Prime Network officials have gone back to the table to discuss merger possibilities, which would go a long way to stop the red ink on both sides of the regional sports battle. A brighter light has been SportsChannel's regional services, which have added outlets in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Ohio without wiping out the profits of the established services in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

NBC is in the midst of selling the PPV Olympics to both cable operators and NBC affiliates. The network's first PPV pricing structure drew a chorus of boos from the cable industry, and since that time, Olympic partners NBC and Cablevision Systems have created three committees to examine various issues and provide more flexibility on pricing packages. Rogers acknowledged that problems remain. "Yes, there are complexities," he said, relating to trapping and channel capacity. But, he said, "we had a real turning point" at the Western Cable Show. "There are a lot more believers now," said Rogers. "The nonbelievers have become a real minority."

NBC's rocky cable forays stem from a clash between what the network thinks is best for the cable industry and what the cable industry thinks is best for the cable industry. More often than not, the leverage a cable operator possesses gives him the advantage in battles with programers. It may be, however, that CNBC's potential buy of FNN will be the first time the industry will view NBC as having done the right thing. -MS, MAJ gets a breakup fee of "more than $1 million" if FNN walks away from the deal. With about 10 million overlapping subscribers between FNN and CNBC, the combined service will have about 42 million subscribers.

An internal memo from NBC President Robert Wright said: "There may be those who question making this sort of investment at a time when finances are tight." But, he said, it is his "hope and expectation that the collapse of the television marketplace will not go on forever," and in the meantime, NBC must continue its goal to broaden its business.

Barber said he's looking to mesh both programing and staffers from the two channels, which each employ more than 300. Business news will remain during daytime, and CNBC will continue with its plans for a revamped magazine-formatted and consumer news oriented prime time. It will also keep its talk weekend schedule instead of FNN: Sports. -SDM

NBC, CBS DROP PUT PLAN

BC, followed by CBS, announced last week that they will scrap the audience delivery guarantee policy developed last June, designed to compensate for sudden shifts in Nielsen's people-using-television (PUT) numbers and return to traditional ratings guarantees based on current Nielsen numbers.

Pierson Mapes, president, NBC Television Network, said because the networks did not use firm numbers in their guarantees, as much as $100 million-$200 million in ad dollars was "deferred" to other media. Said Mapes: "We are back to what we did two years ago...it should bring money back to the three networks." Mapes described the lost revenue to other media as a "real piece of change."

George Schweitzer, senior vice president, communications, CBS, said the decision is "a reflection of the marketplace and is more responsive to advertisers." Schweitzer added that CBS has made "significant gains" and is more comfortable about its position.

The PUT plan, developed by NBC, which was adopted by all three networks and criticized by ad agencies, used current PUT numbers and compared those numbers to trends established over the past eight years to "smooth out" the Nielsen numbers.

ABC has not yet announced changes in its policy, although media buyers think it will soon. ABC issued a statement saying it has been considering the situation for some time and has found there is greater stability in the performance of Nielsen's ratings this year compared to last. ABC said it will make an announcement in the "near future."

Media buyers, although pleased with the announcements, were not surprised considering the current advertising environment. "They're just confirming the obvious," said Jon Mandel, senior vice president, director of national broadcast, Grey Advertising, adding that "given the marketplace, no one has a choice." The networks, he said, are also not only competing with cable and syndication. "Magazines are extremely soft and the price-value relationship of non-broadcast verses broadcast is very attractive," he said.

Whether this news will improve the upfront market, which is expected to be soft, is unknown. Consumer confidence is at a low right now, and the networks and agencies hope the end of the war will signal a return to spending.

Not everyone is convinced that the end of the war means the return of a strong economy and thus strong advertising commitments. Grey's Mandel said national advertising tends to "lag behind" recessions both when they start and when they end. Even if the recession ends in June, he said, the lag in the advertising marketplace could continue until April 1992.

The lag may also affect advertiser reaction to NBC and CBS's announcement. Last year's guarantee plan was put in place just days before the upfront market started to move, and many advertisers may not have been able to shift money commitments around at the last minute, leaving agencies with their hands tied. The reason for the announcements at this time, Mandel speculated, is that planning is being done now and the networks may bring money back. "If they had waited," he said, "they would lose [more] money."

If the economy does not return, it is possible the networks might try to delay upfront for as long as possible. -

FROM 'MUST CARRY, MUST PAY' TO 'I PAY/YOU PAY'

The broadcast industry is in a quandary over how best to deal with the issues of must carry and retransmission consent. As a result, a new proposal has emerged—"I pay/you pay"—which would amend the Communications Act to give broadcasters the right to grant or withhold retransmission consent. The industry's initial plan, "if carryshall pay" that would require cable systems to carry most broadcaster signals as well as pay for them, fizzled out last year after it became apparent that Capitol Hill wasn't thrilled with the idea.

Under the "I pay/you pay" scenario, which is the brainchild of Cosmos Broadcasting's Jim Sefert and several other group operators, a station could charge cable systems for retransmitting its signal or negotiate other compensation such as an extra cable channel to carry its local news or sports programing. Or perhaps, a cable system would agree to promote the broadcaster's station for free in exchange for permission to carry the signal. This would all be subject to individual negotiation.

More important, "I pay/you pay" sets up a mechanism by which smaller independent stations would pay to be carried on cable's leased access channels. And since the provision calls for the FCC to set the terms and conditions for a system's leased access channels, it is believed the fee would be minor and in the case of public stations even nominal, $1 perhaps.

Sefert and others are exploring these options that they hope will satisfy concerns of both affiliate and independent broadcasters and result in a unified industry strategy. The industry is divided into two camps; those who want must carry and those who want a retransmission consent requirement.

Most affiliates feel that must carry does not go far enough in addressing the "fundamental inequities" between broadcasters and cable. They see a retransmission consent requirement as a way to "level the playing field." "For over-the-air broadcasting to survive, we need a second revenue stream, said one affiliate. But independent stations see must carry as essential to their survival. The Association of Independent Television Stations has made must carry a priority. INTV's David Donovan said the association was examining the proposal with an "eye towards making sure that independent stations secure guaranteed carriage."

However, as one broadcaster put it: "We're not going to get both." He feels the Sefert proposal has "a lot of promise." The National Association of Broadcasters television board voted to pursue must carry and retransmission consent, with the latter seen as a long-term goal. NAB President Eddie Fritts said "I pay/you pay," is a "creative proposal" but did not comment specifically on the plan.

(Both broadcast and cable lawyers think cable's compulsory license would not be affected by this new plan.) It is also hoped cable will find "I pay/you pay" more

It is also hoped cable will find "I pay/you pay" more appealing. But based on reaction from National Cable Television Association President Jim Mooney, broadcasters have to make a more convincing case: "It sounds to me like a scheme where the poor broadcasters pay the rich broadcasters with the cable operator as the transfer agent" -KM

CBS TAKES SWEEPS, TIES FOR SECOND, SEASON-TO-DATE

Win is first outright victory in six years; network has seven out of top 10 specials n a dramatic turnaround, CBS won the February prime time sweeps by half a rating point, and in so doing climbed into a tie with ABC for second place in the prime time ratings, season to date (through February 26). It's turning out to be the closest prime time season race in years. NBC's ratings lead for the season has been cut to three-tenths of a point, while each network commands roughly a 21 share of audience.

It was the first time CBS had an outright sweeps victory since February 1985 (although the network posted a tie for first with NBC in February 1986). The network's sweeps performance was some of the best news for CBS since Entertainment president Jeff Sagansky joined the network over a year ago with a mandate to turn things around.

For the sweep (Jan. 30-Feb. 26), CBS averaged a 13.4 rating and 22 share, followed by second-place NBC, which averaged a 12.9/21. ABC was third, with a 12.1/20. Fox, which expanded to five nights of programing this season, up from three nights last season, averaged a 7.1/11, up 3% from a year ago.

While CBS helped its own cause with a 7% ratings gain from a year ago, it was also helped by NBC's 15% sweeps ratings fall-off. ABC was 8% off its February 1990 ratings mark.

Season to date (through Feb. 26), NBC has a prime time average of 12.8/ 21, down 14%, while CBS and ABC are tied, each with a 12.5/21.

The three-network rating was down 6% to a 38.6, according to the Nielsen Peoplemeter, said David Poltrack, senior vice president, research and planning, CBS. But according to the Nielsen overnights, which cover about half the country, the three networks are down only about 3%, said Poltrack, who once again challenged the accuracy of the peoplemeter system.

However, Poltrack did acknowledge that significant gains for CNN's Persian Gulf War coverage "was a major contributor to the network decline." CNN averaged a 4.3 prime time rating in February, up from a 1.2 a year ago.

CBS was helped significantly by special programs, which accounted for 25% of its sweeps schedule, more than any other network. The network had seven of the top 10 rated specials, including

Helping Fox's Sunday night: 'In Living Color'

Highest rated movie-of-the-sweeps: CBS's 'Sarah: Plain and Tall' top-ranked Very Best of Ed Sullivan, which scored a 21.3/33. The Grammy Awards special, also on CBS, was the second-highest rated special, with an 18.8/31.

But while the other networks stressed CBS's strength in specials as perhaps the main reason for its sweeps win, Poltrack argued the network was also building its program base.

For example, Poltrack reported that among regular series programs during the sweeps, CBS was also up 7%, matching its performance as a whole, while NBC was down 15% among regular series, also matching its decline overall. ABC was down 2% in regular series programs.

Also, CBS logged four of the top 10 series this February, as opposed to just one of the top 10 a year ago. "We are developing our core schedule," he said.

As for movie performance, Poltrack said one of Sagansky's key objectives from the start has been to acquire stronger theatrical titles and develop stronger made-for-TV movies. The strategy paid off last month. CBS was the top performer in movies, averaging 14.8/24, followed by NBC, 14.2/22, and ABC, 12/19.

According to Bob Niles, vice president, research, NBC, the network expected CBS to do quite well, finishing at least a strong second. "The big question was whether their specials would put them over the top," he said. As to the rest of the season, it is likely

As to the rest of the season, it is likely that NBC will retain its prime time ratings crown. Niles' estimate was that the network would win by two-tenths or three-tenths of a rating point. As for second place, he said, "I wouldn't want to call that one."

Poltrack didn't disagree. But he said that CBS was well positioned to make a run at the top spot next season. Meanwhile, Fox's research vice president, Andy Fessell, said the network was pleased with its performance in the sweeps. "We took a risk rolling out two nights," said Fessell. "With the growth we're seeing in February, we feel our plan has been a success." -SM

he National Telecommunications and Information Administration's spectrum management policy raised the ante of spectrum auctions for all future allocations. Although the report released last week, "U.S. Spectrum Management Policy: Agenda for the Future," shied away from linking broadcast spectrum with auctions, NTIA did not rule out the possibility that frequencies not already assigned could go to the highest bidder.

Janice Obuchowski, NTIA administrator, said the problem is systemic: "Pulling balls out of a drum is probably not a superior way to allocate a public resource, particularly when immediately thereafter checks are written and transfers are made of those very same licenses." The report said market-based principles, including competitive bidding, will improve the allocation and assignment processes while raising revenue for the federal treasury.

NTIA realizes the sensitivity of auctioning broadcast spectrum, but sources said the agency will pursue it unless there is considerable congressional opposition. As such, NTIA has left the door open for Congress or the FCC to decide which licensees operate in the "public interest" and should therefore be exempt from "competitive bidding."

The report defended spectrum auctions and rebuked the argument that spectrum users enter into a "public service" barter with the government. NTIA said "a decision to impose competitive bidding or fees on broadcasters is not controlled by the existence of a 'bargain' or 'contract.' It is not self-evident that any particular service must be exempt from the requirements, including competitive bidding, of an efficient and equitable spectrum management system."

But David Donovan, INTV vice president, Association of Independent Television Stations, disagreed. He said auctions "undermine the classic quid pro quo bargain of spectrum for public service."

A National Association of Broadcasters spokeswoman said, "NAB has a long-standing opposition to auctions for broadcast spectrum."

The report also said the FCC should streamline processes, retain and make more flexible the block allocation system, and establish an NTIA-FCC Strategic Planning Council.

or weeks, if not months, FCC Commissioner Andrew Barrett has held the key to the fin-syn battle. If he sides with FCC Chairman Alfred Sikes and Commissioner James Quello, the networks will win something close to repeal—like the three-year sunset of the rules the FCC has proposed (BROAD-CASTING, Feb. 25). If he teams up with Commissioners Ervin Duggan and Sherrie Marshall, Hollywood may come away with some residual rules that will likely mitigate the networks' leverage in program negotiations.

No one knows where Barrett stands today, but he told BROADCASTING last Friday that his position would be "evident" by the end of this week. He promised not to drag out the uncertainty surrounding his vote.

Barrett's non-position plunged the fin-syn issue into a state of suspended animation last week. No real movement or major substantive discussions about the issue occurred. Sikes, who met with Duggan last Thursday, showed little willingness to deal, leading some to speculate that he is confident Andrew Barrett will supply his needed third vote or that he is willing to come out on the short end of a 3-2 vote.

Musician-composer-record-and-TV-producer Quincy Jones is scheduled to plead Hollywood's fin-syn case in meetings with the five FCC commissioners this Wednesday (March 6)—the last day any of the fin-syn parties are allowed to contact FCC officials on the issue. Accompanying Jones will be Time Warner lobbyist Carol Melton.

Time Warner and Jones have a long and close association involving records, movies and TV shows. Among other projects, Warner Bros. is backing and syndicating Jones's Jesse Jackson Show and it holds the syndication rights to NBC's popular Monday night sitcom, the Fresh Prince of Bel Air, which Jones is producing "in house" for NBC. Time Warner also owns a piece of Jones's independent television station in New Orleans, WNOL-TV.

Jones's presence at the FCC would runs counter to Hollywood's strategy of not using entertainers in its fin-syn campaign, as it did during the first fin-syn go-round in the early 1980's. But as Time Warner is quick to point out. Jones, with his entrepreneurial interests in TV production and broadcasting, is more than a celebrity.

Much of the 11th hour lobbying activities seems directed at swing vote Barrett. In addition to Jones, his calendar shows meetings planned with CBS's Jeff Sagansky (Monday), ABC's Tom Murphy and Daniel Burke (Tuesday), and Columbia Pictures Television's Gary Leiberthal and Alan Levine (Tuesday).

On Capitol Hill last week, members of a House Appropriations Subcommittee expressed interest in fin-syn. Chairman Sikes was there to discuss the agency's fiscal 1992 budget request. Subcommittee Chairman Neal Smith (D-Iowa) affirmed Congress's oft-stated neutrality, stating he would not welcome any attempts to attach fin-syn riders to any of his appropriations bills. Representative Bill Alexander (D-Ark.) received assurances from Sikes the agency would act "impartially" and not cave to outside pressures.

In what some are seeing as an effort to stem the FCC leaks on fin-syn, FCC Inspector General James Warwick began checking the calendars and phone logs of FCC commissioners and their staffs last week. Warwick had no comment.

NETWORK RADIO: POWER OF THE PIPELINE

In good economic times or bad, a network can give any radio station a needed ratings boost. The real question in these bad times is the health of the networks themselves. Network revenue was virtually flat in 1990 and only the most optimistic believe significant gains will be posted this year. The no-growth year precipitated major sales and/or programing changes at most of the major networks and 1991 could produce more of the same. But network radio has always been dynamic. Today, increasing news—commercial and public—and niche programing are the trends. Despite the dour economic climate, the Radio Network Association chooses to remain upbeat. As the baby boomers age, says RNA Chairman William Battison, ''radio will play an increasingly important role in their lives—and network radio will continue to be the most cost-effective way to buy radio.''

FLAT OUTLOOK FOR RADIO NETWORK REVENUE

Although advertising expenditures are down, network executives remain optimistic of rebound following end of Gulf war and recession

y most accounts, the old theories that "radio always does well in a D recession" aren't holding up. According to Radio Network Association figures, network radio revenue grew a modest 1.3% in 1990 compared to 1989, with a 7.8% loss (see graph) in the last quarter of the year, when the recession officially began. While up-front 1991 was strong going into the new year, the scatter market was softer than anticipated, and ad dollars dried up almost completely Jan. 16, the day the U.S. went to war. Despite the burgeoning stock market and declining interest rates, the recession and the war postponed many advertising buys-or dissolved them altogether.

On the bright side, RNA President Bud Heck is optimistic that network radio still could experience 5% to 6% growth by the end of the year. "We expect that the war and the recession both will be resolved, and the stock market is going like crazy. These are very positive signals that the economy is expanding, and if we get a sudden halt to the war, this downturn should be very short-lived."

By last January most radio networks found that 1991 might prove to be a challenge equal to 1990. Although the industry still realized a modest 2.4% increase for the month, the outbreak of the Persian Gulf war Jan. 16 caused some clients to decide not to advertise in a war environment. Money that had been earmarked for ad schedules was either delayed or returned to the bottom line.

Unistar Radio Networks Co-Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Nick Verbitsky said that world and national events have "permeated the advertising industry to the point where business has just dried up for every medium." He noted that in past economic declines, radio had been considered resilient and recession-proof, which was not the case this time. "Because every medium is in such a slump, the price advantages of radio just don't exist," he said. The unpredictable element, in the ad-

The unpredictable element, in the advertising equation was the war, "because in modern times we haven't had a declared war, so we weren't prepared." Verbitsky said. Because consumers are still buying products and the stock market is doing so well, while all media, including radio, have experienced slump, "several chapters of economic theory will be rewritten," he said. "By and large, when someone is looking for a truly national medium, radio is an excellent buy." During an economic slump, he said, advertisers don't say "cancel newspaper and magazines, cancel outdoor, cancel network television and cable, but keep that network radio schedule."

Verbitsky predicted that once the war successfully ends and the recession turns around, "business will do better, the country will do better and we'll get back that optimistic, positive attitude that's in short supply these days."

Robert Kipperman, CBS Radio Networks vice president and general manager, optimistically anticipates slight growth in 1991, but cautioned that "at this point it will be only marginally better than 1990, and is largely dependent on the length of the Persian Gulf war and other economic factors." He said one bright spot could come indirectly, through increased postal rates, which could force some advertisers to rethink using direct mail. "If some of these companies cut back, the radio industry could reap the benefit—and conceivably make 1991 better than we've anticipated."

Sheridan Broadcasting Networks President Jay Williams agreed that 1991 has been much softer than anticipated. "The number of up-front clients fell off dramatically and we're disappointed by what we see for the first quarter," he said. "We see signs of hope for later in the year, but things are uncertain due to the economic climate that many of our clients are experiencing, as well as their reluctance to commit to long-term situations when they don't know their own situations." Still, Williams was optimistic that business will improve. Prior to fourth quarter 1990 economic stagnation, virtually every radio network restructured its sales and/or programing efforts. Unistar actually began the trend in 1989 (BROADCASTING, Aug. 28, 1989), followed by CBS Radio in February 1990 (BROADCASTING, Feb. 12, 1990), ABC in May (BROADCASTING, May 21, 1990), and Westwood One later that summer (BROADCASTING, Aug. 20, 1990). What contribution might these reconfigurations have had on flat network radio-revenues?

"Absolutely none," said ABC Radio Networks' Lou Severine, senior vice president and director of sales. "In fact, it allowed us to tack on two percentage points in business we would not have gotten otherwise." Until the war broke out, ABC was running 10% ahead in upfront, which normally accounts for 55% of the network's business, he said.

Severine concedes that following ABC's reconfiguration "there was a lot of confusion and we had a lot of explaining to do." But, he said, by mid-summer the agencies and advertisers had adapted to the new five-network structure. "By then everybody had forgotten the old networks such as Information and Direction, and after that we had no problems," he said.

CBS Radio's Kipperman agreed that reconfiguration required a period of explanation. "as with anything that's new. But once we specifically detailed what was done, they understood and accepted what we did." Kipperman suggested that, as a whole, reconfiguration received high marks, not only because of realigned sales strategies, but also because it has allowed some networks to evaluate programing and services with the eventual purpose of cutting elements that were no longer economically or strategically viable.

"In this evaluation and analysis, networks analyzed those services that their affiliates could really use," he said. As such, "it was a positive move, and it enabled networks to finetune the programs that were kept on the air to make them even better."

The general thesis behind network restructuring was to make the sum of a network's parts greater than its individual programs and services, said William Battison, president and chief financial officer. Westwood One Inc., which operates Mutual Broadcasting, NBC Radio, and The Source. "The intent was to solidify and codify certain network elements into efficient packages that were more attractive to advertisers than if those elements were sold separately." he said. "We all recognize that in this day of diversity and options available to radio stations. the old days of network radio are over. There's a great variety of ways a station uses our product. so we've taken that flexibility and packaged it sensibly for the advertiser by creating permanent packages and giving them a definition or name."

Battison said each network had its own corporate objective, and he insisted that rather than striving to be number one. Westwood One restructured to provide the most rational combination of elements for the advertiser." Battison said being first was less important than giving the advertiser something that was consistent and contiguous in terms of the line-up of stations, and provided a measure of comfort and trust that they were still buying the individual networks they had prior to reconfiguration. We moved some inventory, but overall we kept our franchises intact, and also created a new network from pieces of those.

In the new order of network radio, rank no longer matters. Battison said. "What advertisers are looking for is what you can deliver in terms of efficiencies and effectiveness to the advertiser. Nobody's going to buy you just because you're number one, two, or three, because there's only a handful of major networks today." In most cases, network restructuring was undertaken to "make the advertiser's job easier," Battison said. "It gives them more audience, more numbers, better gross ratings points, numbers that are more in tune with what advertisers are accustomed to buying." He noted that one ABC network has a 2.3 rating. "which is great because it's closer to cable's numbers.

All told, agencies and advertisers have greeted restructuring with optimism, Battison said. "Once the dust settled, everyone realized they were still buying the same big four networks and the same two ethnic networks, and the gross rating points were being provided in a manner that was easy to look at, track, and follow." He also predicted that, over time, this approach will not be special to network radio. "In a year or two cable will also be looking at ways to package themselves more effectively, and 10 years from now you may see the major TV networks in a similar situation.'

Still, some confusion remained when RADAR 41 was released in August (BROADCASTING, Aug. 20, 1990) and possibly lingers with the release of RA-DAR 42 last month (BROADCASTING, Feb. 25). Individual networks were charged with confusing network audiences before and after the restructuring period, which some critics, including some radio network executives, criticized as apples and oranges.

Not so, said ABC's Severine. He claimed that, to adapt RADAR 40 and

COMPENSATION VITAL TO NETWORK AFFILIATIONS

S tation compensation remains a major factor in the relationship between a network and its affiliates. Through this "revenue sharing" plan, a network compensates a station for relinquishing valuable inventory in return for airing network spots. The more spots a station clears and the greater its audience, the more its compensation—or so the theory goes. For competitive reasons, networks are reluctant to divulge specific numbers regarding their compensation strategies, but several network presidents privately agreed that the most valuable affiliates receive upwards of $1 million for their network affiliations.

Most major radio network executives view compensation as a necessary evil of doing business. Among them are:

• ABC Radio Networks Senior Vice President/Director of Sales Lou Severine: "Compensation will always be a fact of life, but we've tried to make it a little less important. If you have nothing to offer a station but money, you're at a disadvantage. We know we have to do more for the stations than just give them money, because when they compare what we can give them per spot versus what they could do locally, we're going to lose every time."

• CBS Radio Networks Vice President/General Manager Bob Kipperman: "Over the last 4½ years we've developed our programing and services so they would play an important factor when we talked with potential stations for affiliation. We found that our resources today are far better than they were a few years back, which has enabled us to go in and provide services to stations they can't otherwise get. Our key is to give them programing and services that will make them stand above the competition in their markets. Compensation, unfortunately, is still part of our business, but we are continuing to look at providing better programing and services in order to reduce compensation."

• Unistar Co-Chairman/CEO Nick Verbitsky: "Compensation is our biggest budget line item, and that will be maintained as business gets tighter. We obviously negotiate as hard as we can, and so do the stations. We win some and we lose some, just like everybody. Everybody knows the game plan: we're trying to buy time as efficiently as we can from a network standpoint, and generally that's what compensation boils down to."

• Westwood One President/CFO William Battison: "Compensation always will be important because of the relationship between the network and station in today's marketplace. However, as we have seen in the last five weeks, the nature of the product is incredibly important. This is why we've made an effort to improve upon the NBC and Mutual news operations. Compensation is a function of audience and inventory and, while it's not a straight-line equation, the station that carries enough spots and has enough audience is worth a lot of money. Generally, it comes down to buying audience wholesale and selling it retail. If you pay too much you lose money on the transaction."

Sheridan Broadcasting Networks President Jay Williams: "Compensation continues to be a large part of any network's cost, and certainly is the largest cost factor in operations for all networks. We would rather approach it from an ability to service better rather than just a dollar amount, but sometimes from a competitive standpoint we see needs to increase compensation to remain competitive in the marketplace."

41 to new configurations in RADAR 42, those networks that reshuffled audiences under new names theoretically apportioned the audiences from the old networks to the new networks. "Nothing has changed," he said. "Whatever audience we have taken from one network and put on another network, that's the audience that will be on that network. That's all there is to it."

Whatever confusion does exist in RA-DAR comes in determining network rank, which is of little importance to the advertiser, said Kipperman. "Whether a network is number one or five, it basically comes down to cost per thousand for a particular daypart, not network rank." Other factors that also preclude raw RADAR numbers and rankings include qualitative audience and in-programing spots (those that run within network programing vs. those extracted from network content). "In-programing is extremely important for a number of advertisers who can be assured they will run within a newscast, or baseball, or football, or the Masters."

While RADAR has proven to be acceptable to agencies and clients as a measurement tool, Sheridan's Williams suggested that network reconfigurations will force agencies and advertisers to look beyond numbers to capture the full value of the network radio audience. "With all the changes that have occured over the last year, we can't just look at the numbers as the sole methodology for value," he said.

One of ABC's stated objectives in its restructuring plan was to draw business from other media. As part of this push the company has aligned itself with Newsweek magazine, Times Mirror and Lifetime Cable "to go after dollars we can't necessarily get." Severine said. 'That's the wave of the future and anybody who thinks otherwise-no matter what they're selling-is going to be lost." Severine said the buzzword of the 1990's is "value-added" and suggested that was why such crossmedia ventures are becoming attractive. "Advertisers know that if they spend $1 million on three pages for five issues in Newsweek, and $1 million advertising on ABC-they get more than just buying $2 million worth of advertising," he said.

Unistar's Verbitsky said that radio should enjoy more of this growth than other media, largely because of the stagnation of magazines, newspapers and network TV. "Radio will continue to experience strong audiences because people still listen to it as they have for years," he said. "Not everybody watches network television anymore, and newspapers and magazines aren't read by a lot of people anymore—especially in the younger demos."

Jay Williams said network radio is poised to reap the benefits of the continued high cost of TV while audiences drop. "More clients are looking to us for alternatives that can provide the reach and frequency they're looking for while they trim their overall budgets." he said. Accordingly, a number of advertisers have investigated more use of network radio as a medium, "and they're looking to other media to replace GRP delivery and a high cost of television." Williams stated.

Kipperman said that reconfiguration has allowed network radio to carve out a lead that other media eventually will follow. "We have positioned ourselves for the future, and we will start to reap some of the benefits from these changes over the next two or three years," he said. "As the economy starts to get healthy, there's no question we will grow at a faster pace than the economy."

NETWORKS HELP SATISFY LISTENERS' NEWS APPETITE

s far as radio news is concerned, there couldn't be a better time to be in the business. Since late 1989, beginning with the San Francisco earthquake, followed by the tearing down of the Berlin Wall, the crumbling of communism in the Eastern Bloc, the savings and loan debacle, and the invasion of Kuwait last August, news operations have had their hands full. Once listeners depend on a station for information, even if it is a music or a newsdriven format, operators had better be prepared to fulfill that expectation or lose their audience to competitors.

Stations, particularly music-driven ones, are scrambling to satisfy their listeners' insatiable appetite for information. Stations with and without news departments are finding scores of sources from which to choose their news, with companies such as Associated Press, ABC Radio, CBS Radio, Unistar, United Press, Mutual, NBC and Zap News among those with services available.

Unistar distributes the CNN Radio Network and CNN Headline News radio via satellite. Gary Fries, president, Unistar Radio Networks, has definitely seen a surge of interest in news from music stations. "Stations that before had never considered news and information have found that they want to have the ability to keep their listeners informed," said Fries, "and I think this is not going to be a short term thing."

The initial surge of interest in affiliating with one of the two services, said Fries, has not diminished. Station feedback and research conducted by Unistar, said Fries, reveals that there is interest in long-term affiliations from music stations. Since the outbreak of war, Unistar has signed 95 new affiliates to one of the two services.

"This is revisiting the issue with an awful lot of radio stations," said Peter Moore, CBS vice president affiliate relations, "because their listeners will now grow to expect news on the station." Operators will now have to compensate to meet that level, said Moore, or listeners will begin sampling all over the dial.

As for the rush from stations to affiliate, Moore said CBS is represented in all the major markets. "We have a lot of radio stations in medium and smaller markets call us, and the stations in top 50 to 100 markets already know we are there because we are constantly talking to them," he said. "Besides," he added, "we are not looking for the guys that come in like the locusts and leave like the locusts. We are not looking for that type of affiliations. In fact, contractually, there are certain specifications so that overnight affiliations can't happen. Not just for us, but for all of the networks," he said.

Many stations are reaping the best of all possible worlds, affiliating with as many networks as they can and then sampling for the best news product. AP Broadcast Services, deputy director of news and managing editor, Brad Kabfeld, likes to think of his team as "the Stealth Radio Network—we are everywhere but unrecognizable—we take whatever shape our affiliates need us to take," he said.

AP has been the radio network providing coverage for Armed Forces Radio and Television, said Kabfeld, with four reporters in the area reporting exclusively for radio (AP has about 50 reporters in the region). The network provides affiliates with two channels, the Network News Main channel, and the AP Hotline. "The idea," said Kabfeld, "is to give stations as many different formats as we can—the point to AP is flexibility—we don't want to tie their hands; we want to serve them."

"The three things that are always looked at, in making an affiliation decision," said Derek Berghuis, senior vice president of programing and affiliate marketing, ABC Radio Networks, "are compensation, product and inventory. We are very product intensive." At ABC, he said, it is the quality of the news product that makes the affiliation desirable. "We don't compensate stations at the same levels as other networks," he said. "We couldn't and provide the same product that we do right now, and still be in business."

Frank Raphael, ABC Radio director of network programing, said the emphasis is on the long-term. "We perceive of our affiliations as partnerships for the long haul, so there really hasn't been a bunch of quick and dirty affiliations here, that is not the business we are in," he said.

The crisis has enabled music-driven radio stations to discover information and how valuable it is to their listeners, said Raphael. "These stations are getting a lot of feedback that they are very surprised to hear, about how valuable news and information are to their listeners," he said.

A recent newcomer to the world of radio news is Jim Hood's Zap News. The Persian Gulf war has been the company's "trial by fire," said Hood, and so far, their client stations seem satisfied. Most of Zap News' 200 affiliates are music stations, according to Hood. With a few news, talk and religious stations thrown into the mix. "We received a surge of requests when the fighting broke out," he said, "but it has certainly gone back to normal since then."

Zap news operates much the same as AP or UPI, said Hood. Its broadcast desk is based in Fairfax, Va. (outside Washington). The company relies on reporters, stringers and news companies with which it has news exchanges, to gather information, which is then sent out using a computer system. The difference with AP and UPI, said Hood, is that Zap News is smaller and has no bureaus. "We don't have bureaus, we are just bypassing the whole bureau structure," he said.

Zap News's plans for the coming year include building up the services it already has (to include news gathering from all 50 states) and the addition of business reports and a customized audio service. Affiliates could then order only the information or material that it needed. -tc

NONCOMMERCIAL RADIO: LEAN, BUT PROLIFIC

Even in uncertain economic times, NPR and APR continue to deliver news with extra money from CPB, listeners, other funds isteners scanning the radio dial for comprehensive news coverage and analysis of events around the world, would do well to check with their local noncommercial broadcaster. Around the country, public radio, in the form of National Public Radio and American Public Radio, has proved that even in a depressed economy, it can deliver as well as any commercial network (executives at both networks would argue even better).

"It has been a fine hour for radio, especially for public radio," says Steven Salyer, president, American Public Radio. Listener response to APR's efforts, he said, has been underscored by the response many stations are getting during their ongoing fund raising drives. "Listeners keep telling us that public radio is, in their eyes, the more authoritative source," he said, adding that they are proving it by reaching for their wallets, even in tight economic times.

Steven Salyer

"The heart of what we do is reflecting on events," said Doug Bennet, president, National Public Radio. "Our real forte is looking at why something happened." The advantage enjoyed by NPR reporters, he said, is that they can take time with a story and analyze it in depth. "Public radio has a special obligation to inform—and it has the flexibility to do it," Bennet said. The comprehensiveness of the coverage on both networks (which share many affiliates) has, in his opinion, made public radio "the place to go for the person who wants to be informed."

Keeping their listeners informed has meant escalating costs for both networks. But both expect to meet the challenge of continuing their expanded news coverage and other programing. "We are very careful about the budget and not overspending," said Bennet. "Times are uncertain, so we have been very careful not to overspend." NPR has eight reporters in the Gulf region and uses many stringers, some of whom are BBC reporters.

To fund the effort, NPR has put into place a three-pronged plan to raise additional dollars (BROADCASTING, Feb. 4). To date, said Bennet, NPR had handled coverage out of internal resources. The plan is to raise $1.4 million additional funds. They would come mainly from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, voluntary contributions from member stations and foundation and corporate gifts. "The campaign is in its third week," said Bennet, "and we are very close to target."

American Public Radio does not produce its own programing, said Salyer, although APR does finance program production. "Our expanded war coverage has not had a seriously depleting effect on our budget," he said. To make the full extent of programing available, APR booked extra satellite time and was running the BBC World News Service 24 hours a day, said Salver. Stations had the ability to monitor the feeds and select the programing they wanted. After the initial days of war, APR has been monitoring the feeds, instead of just providing them, and alerts stations to pertinent news coverage as it happens.

"Our prinicipal effort," said Salyer, "has focused on making available the full extent of coverage of the BBC World Service and the CBC coverage."

Among the news and information programs provided to its more than 400 affiliates are As it Happens, an hourlong news and interview program produced by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.; Marketplace, two daily editions, one nine-minute morning report and a 29-minute evening report, produced by University of Southern California Radio; Modern Times with Larry Josephson, a weekly, two-hour, call-in program produced by WNYC-AM-FM New York; Monitor Radio Early and Monitor Radio Daily and Monitor Radio Weekend editions.

Coverage provided by NPR to its 425

affiliates ran 24 hours over the first three days of the conflict and included expanded hours for Morning Edition and All Things Considered. Since then, expanded coverage has been limited to hourly newscasts, daily two-hour national call-in programs (one of which C-SPAN carried) and live coverage of press briefings and presidential addresses. "We have tried very hard to keep up our other kinds of coverage." said Bennet. "to try not to let the war squeeze out the rest of the news completely."

The ability to bring together a series of international resources into comprehensive packages is what has made public radio shine, said Salyer. "What our listeners are looking for is the multiple perspective," he said, "I think that APR, because of our international relationships, can provide that perspective. We have discovered that there is an unquenchable appetite for this kind of international material." he said. "Radio is so accessible—and there haven't been that many pictures from the war until recently—people have rediscovered the power of radio." -tc n an attempt to carve out a strong presence in the rapidly expanding Hispanic advertising market, CBS Radio last year launched the CBS Hispanic Radio Network. Drawing on sports and entertainment programing targeted at Spanish-language affiliates, the network, which is a cooperative effort between CBS Radio Sports and CBS Radio Reps, went on-air last July with Spanish-language play-by-play of the Major League All Star Game. Programing continued with the baseball play-offs and World Series. A Magical Christmas From Disnevland in December, as well as the NFL play-off games and Super Bowl in January 1991.

CBS CARVES HISPANIC NICHE WITH SPORTS ENTERTAINMENT

According to Nick Kiernan, operations manager for CBS Hispanic, stations in 30 markets carried the baseball broadcasts, covering 80% of the U.S. Spanish-speaking population, while some 25 picked up the NFL coverage. As a whole, Kiernan said that stations appreciated the schedule of programing, "and advertisers are beginning to appre-ciate us as a viable medium." He said that baseball play-by-play coverage was an obvious element of the network's programing, but the football broadcasts were met with some skepticism. While the network did not conduct audience research for the football programing, network inventory was sold out.

Kiernan admitted that some stations felt we were stretching it a bit far with football, "because Hispanics traditionally prefer soccer, but many stations told us they had great response from listeners who were watching the game on television and listening on radio." He said that some stations reported that this was the first time their listeners were able to appreciate football "in my own language."

Kiernan said that the network is assessing its sports and entertainment programing that was offered in 1990, and is planning to enhance the baseball package. "We're also looking to see what we learned from the football experience, as well as various entertainment programs." He also indicated that CBS was looking into plans for Spanish-language newscasts. "We're often asked about our plans for news, and we discuss it quite a bit," he said. "Stations are looking to us to provide leadership, and we're trying to figure out ways to do it.

One challenge experienced by Spanish-language programers is the nebulous definition of Hispanic radio. Kiernan said CBS Hispanic is attempting to avoid the "Spanish niche issue" by pro-

COUNTRY FORMAT BENEFITS FROM NEW ARTISTS, CHANGING PERCEPTION OF AUDIENCE

Advertisers, who are increasingly using country performers as spokespersons, have played major role in changing image of country music listener ountry music is the most popular format programed on radio stations in the U.S., according to the BROADCASTING YEARBOOK. Over the last decade, country-formatted radio stations have benefitted from a wealth of new artists and new country music styles, making such performers as Randy Travis, The Judds, Reba McIntire. George Strait and Ricky Skaggs household names across the United States. Madison Avenue has led the way in changing the perception that the country music listener is an undesirable target for advertisers.

According to Ed Salamon, president, Unistar Radio Networks, and member of the Country Radio Broadcasters board of directors: "Country radio is a format that is largely driven by the music, and country music is in better shape today than it has ever been before." There was a time when it was thought that a country album could only sell gold or platinum if it crossed over to the pop music charts, said Salamon. But Randy Travis shattered that myth when his albums went platinum, fueled only by play on country stations. "In a sense, radio has never had better product to work with it has never had more popular product to work with than it does at this time in history." Salamon said.

The prospects for country music look good. According to numbers compiled by Katz Radio Group Research, one out of every six Americans is reached by country radio every week. More importantly. the country music listener indexes above the norm (100) in product consumption categories such as domestic travel (107); personal bank loans (123); sporting goods (115): convenience stores (108), and diet soft drinks (105). As for lifestyle categories, the numbers show married listeners, 112; household size over five, 111; children under 18, 117, and owning a residence, 107.

According to Salamon, the advertising community has played a key role in changing the perception of the country music listener. "The people at Coca-Cola are probably one of America's most sophisticated advertisers." he said. "They chose Randy Travis as their spokesperson. They didn't do that to promote Randy Travis, they did that to promote Coca-Cola." Another example is Oldsmobile, which chose the motherdaughter singing duo. The Judds, for the car manufacturer's "This is not your father's Oldsmobile' campaign.

"So it has turned," said Salamon. "Not only is there a lack of a negative stereotype, there is a positive attraction to country music. And proof of this is that the advertisers are going after country artists as spokespersons."

A large part of country music's attraction stems from its strength with the 25-54 age demographic (see chart). Although radio stations have been shifting their emphasis from the 18-34 demographic to the 25-54 one, country is well-prepared to meet the challenge, said Salamon. "The Country Radio Seminar is one of the reasons that country radio is such a strong competitor.' he said. "One can't underestimate that show [which attracts more than 1,000 participants each year] as a force for country radio. Every station that goes to the Country Radio Seminar comes back better prepared to fight the radio wars in their markets," Salamon said. "Add that to what I mentioned earlier about the music being more popular than ever," he added, "and you have a onetwo punch which makes the future of the format very healthy."

Another phenomenon of country music has been its ability to resist fragmentation. While formats such as CHR. adult contemporary and rock have been splintered into three and four mini-formats, country music has in large part resisted that trend. "What you have is a musical consensus," said Salamon. "You have generations of country music listeners all agreeing on some of the same artists and types of music." Young listeners enjoy the music of older or "heritage" artists; older listeners line up for new performers such as Travis and Strait. "Strangely enough, George Jones will tell us that he is a George Strait fan and vice versa. I do believe that this is part of the music's strength and helps it resist fragmentation," Salamon said.

Strong ties also exist between the artistic community and the country radio stations. And radio programers formatting country stations tend to like country music, said Salamon. "That may seem an obvious statement," he said, "but not all radio programers are fans of the music they program."

NASHVILLE NOTES: THE COUNTRY RADIO SEMINAR

he Interep Radio Store will unveil the next step of its Radio 2000 plan, the formation of the "Country Radio Format Network," at the 22nd annual Country Radio Seminar this week in Nashville (March 6-9). Marc Guild, president of marketing, and Les Goldberg, president, Interep, will present the details at a breakfast on Saturday, March 9. The network will be the first of a group of national networks being developed under the Radio 2000 program, and will match heavy listeners of country radio with heavy users of advertisers' products and/or services.

Larry Daniels, president of the Country Radio Broadcasters, and general manager, KNIX-AM-FM Phoenix, expects this year's CRS attendance to be down somewhat from 1990. "But," he said, "we are coming off 30%-40% increases over the last two years." Daniels expects seminar discussions to be dominated by two issues: "There is such a tremendous amount of country music product right now," he said, "that there isn't enough room on the playlists. Stations are struggling to increase their playlists because there is not enough opportunity to play all the good music that is out there." As a result of the wealth of product available, Daniels said, the second issue is format fragmentation. Although country radio has so far resisted fragmentation, Daniels sees splits at the seams of the format. "We are seeing pull in the directions of traditional, rock and contemporary country," he said. "On the Road Again" is the theme of

"On the Road Again" is the theme of the CRS, which is being held at the Opryland Hotel and Convention Center. Workshops, educational panels and discussions dealing with both the radio and music industries are among discussion highlights. Among the headliners: Roy Blount Jr., writer and humorist; James Gregory, comedian and Epic recording artist; Dick Orkin, president, Dick Orkin's Radio Ranch and Home for Wayward Cowboys, and country musician George Strait.

Bob Pittman, chairman and chief executive officer of Time-Warner and one of the founders of MTV, will participate in the panel Music Video, See It Now: New Artists. New Hits. New Listeners, an analysis of music video's role in breaking in artists, selling product, building image and its effect on the radio listening audience.

Other panels slated for the convention include Breaking the Country Bias: Qualitative and Quantitative Sales Tools You Can Use, with panelists representing the advertising community; Format Fragmentation: Finding your Niche Can

Be a Bitch, will examine hybrid formats and their competitors; Account Development: Getting the Most from Your Clients." on how to turn $500 accounts into $25,000 accounts; The Artist Explosion: Too Many Faces and Not Enough Places on the Playlist, looks at differing priorities of radio stations and record companies; Promotions for All Markets: One Size Fits All, outlines successful promotions for different market sizes and station demographics; Formatics: The Nuts and Bolts of Daily Programing; Database Marketing for Less Than You Think, and Caught in the Crossfire: How the Music Industry Copes with Radio Range Wars will discuss competitive tactics between radio stations in the same market and how that affects record companies with regards to promotions, interviews and new releases.

There also will be two longform sessions. The first will feature Charles Garfield speaking on having a management game plan for the 1990's. Dick Orkin and Cristine Coyle will talk about overcoming the worst creative obstacles.

The Canadian Country Music Association will return to the Country Radio Seminar for the second consecutive year. CCMA will host the seminar's Saturday luncheon and present Canadian talent to the attending broadcasters. -IC

PROGRAMING

'MURPHY,' 'FULL HOUSE' ON A ROLL FOR WARNER

Both shows near 100 clearances for prices said to be premium

urphy Brown and Full House are poised to join the $1 Million (per episode) Club. no small feat at a time when TV stations are keeping a tight rein on program costs. Both shows, from Warner Bros, Domestic Television and Distribution (WBDTD), are cleared in close to 100 markets, said Keith Samples, the company's senior vice president of off-network syndication. Brown. which debuts in syndication in 1992, has only been on the market since last summer, and strong sales for the reruns are a testament to its appeal. House has been on the market longer and debuts this fall.

Both shows are being sold for cash, although Samples said WBDTD may sell sitcoms for cash plus barter or straight barter, in the future.

According to Samples. Murphy Brown has been sold in 96 markets, representing 86% of the U.S., while next season's debut of Full House has been cleared in 90-plus markets with national coverage exceeding 80%.

Samples declined to provide exact dollar figures on the sales of both sitcoms. But he said Brown "easily approaches" the $1 million per episode figure. By comparison, Buena Vista Television's off-network sales of Golden Girls surpassed that figure, the company said in a filing with the FCC. As to Full House, Samples coyly said "some series that get $600,000-$700.000 [per episode] are a huge success, and to get $1 million or more is a real home run."

"Believe me, Warner Bros. is happy with our pricing as it relates to competing premium sitcoms," Samples added. Industry sources have estimated that Columbia's Married could earn $1.1 million to $1.4 million, while the other fall 1992 entry, Roseanne, is said to be reaching upwards of $1.2 million per episode (see box, this page). In 1987 Viacom's The Cosby Show was reported to have earned a record $4.2 million per episode, followed a year later by Columbia's sales of Who's The Boss?, at a reported $2.5 million per episode.

"Cosby and Who's The Boss? were aberrations...very rare cases," Samples said. "WWOR-TV took a $15 million dollar write down [loss] from sitcoms: most of that relates to Coshy. Growing Pains. Murphy Brown. Roseanne and Married....with Children are quality sitcoms and their pricing is in line with what their market value is to stations. You want your customers to make money and see that their lineups are not cannibalized by overpriced sitcoms. so they'll make good profits and be able to buy a Family Matters or a Fresh Prince down the

In recent years, the temptation has been growing to tag 30 seconds or a minute of national barter time onto cash license fees (as is the case with Married and Roseanne, respectively), Warner Bros., so far, has stuck to the traditional straight cash deal, with a track record of success. Samples said cash/barter combinations are not to be feared, and the company has considered the introduction of straight barter deals in the off-net-

ROSEANNE: STEADY AS SHE GOES

While Warner Bros, is blanketing the country with pitches and deals for Murphy Brown and Full House, Viacom is moving at a more methodical pace in clearing Roseanne, scheduled to debut in 1992. The company has cleared the show in close to 30% of the country, sources said, including, WNYW-TV New York and KCOP-TV Los Angeles. Negotiations in Chicago are ongoing. Recent deals include WFXT-TV Boston; WOIO TV Cleveland; KMBC-TV Kansas City, Mo.; WJZY(TV) Charlotte, N.C., WXIX-TV Cincinnati; KPLR-TV St. Louis, WTIC-TV Hartford; KTXL(TV) Sacramento, WXIN-TV Indianapolis, KTSP-TV Minneapolis; WDZL-TV Miami, and WVTV(TV) Milwaukee. Last week, Viacom sales executives made pitches in Chicago and Washington. This week, the company is expected to open up five markets-Dallas, Houston, Portland, Seattle, and Tampa. Sources said prices being paid varied widely. WEXT-TV Boston, for example, was said to have paid about $27,000 per week. which several observers characterized as a great deal for the station. In Cleveland, woto-TV is said to have paid approximately $22,000 per week. which one observer characterized as high for the market. Stations also have to give up 30 seconds of barter time per episode.

work marketplace.

"I think there can be a place for straight barter in the not too distant future," Samples said. "Some stations don't mind giving up one minute of [advertising] inventory if they know there will be some room to tinker with the pricing. Stations go into talks now with five or 10 years of data on that sitcom's network ratings and local tracks, and when it comes to barter, they know the projected value of the spots, what they're giving up and what they're getting in return. They're all very astute."

Of 96 Murphy Brown stations sold at this point, Samples says 36 are affiliates, which he says is attributable to the program's "versatility" to play in prime access, late fringe or early fringe. Only three markets, he says, out of the top 30 ADI markets—Washington, Houston and Minneapolis—have yet to finalize deals for the currently running CBS sitcom.

In the top two markets, Samples says he has had indications from WPIX-TV New York that the station will place Murphy in access at 7:30 p.m. (ET), while co-owned Tribune Broadcasting independent, KTLA-TV Los Angeles, will s a means of cutting costs, networks will be ordering fewer pilots and more pilot presentations, and making better use of made-for television movies and specials as the basis for series. Examining the traditional pilot process was the basis for a Hollywood Radio and Television Society luncheon in Los Angeles last Wednesday, which brought each of the four networks's top development executives together to discuss the process by which network schedules are made.

The panel was moderated by Ted Harbert, executive vice president, prime time, ABC Entertainment and president, HRTS. The networks were represented by Paul Stupin, executive vice president, series programing, Fox Entertainment, Perry Simon, executive vice president, prime time programs, NBC, Stu Bloomberg, executive vice president, ABC Entertainment and Peter Tortorici, senior vice president, program planning, CBS Entertainment.

While each of the networks will be doing approximately the same number of pilot projects that were ordered last year—Fox is slightly up from last year—NBC's Simon said the difference this year is that more of the projects ordered will be in the form of short presentations rather than full-episode length pilots (see "Closed Circuit."). A recent presentation commissioned from a studio provided them with nearly all the information necessary to make a decision about the project, he said, but cost them only about $10,000, a fraction of what a pilot for a half-hour series would cost.

P ublic Broadcasting Service President Bruce Christensen (1) and Corporation for Public Broadcasting President Donald Ledwig (r) signed an agreement last week by which CPB will contribute $22.5 million a year to PBS's new centralized programing and promotion fund. The balance of the fund will come from PBS member stations. With the fund said Ledwig, PBS will provide "more network-like functions than ever before." give it an 11 p.m. (PT) berth following the stations top-rated 10 p.m. local news. Also, Tribune flagship, wGN-TV Chicago is looking at 6 or 7 p.m. (CT) or late fringe, according to Samples.

Full House also picked up the same three Tribune stations, including wGNX-TV Atlanta. Other top market clearances are wGBS-TV Philadelphia, wLVI-TV Boston, wXON-TV Detroit, wTTG-TV Washington, KTVT-TV Dallas and KTXH-TV Houston. The only remaining unsold top 20 markets, which he says are soon to be closed, are San Francisco, Minneapolis and Tampa.

"Cutting back is not the answer," said Tortorici, who noted that contributing to the excesses of the process in the past was that networks often ordered pilots that stood little chance of receiving a series order. "We've gotten to a point where we really believe in what gets made. As for setting stricter limits on the number of pilots CBS will order or the amount of development money the network will spend, he said. "I don't foresee a time when we won't make a pilot that we're passionate about merely because we've reached an artificial barrier."

Simon suggested that the next big hit on television will be an 8 p.m. hour-long action-adventure series with teen and young adult appeal. He made the prediction after being asked whether the networks should assume a bigger burden, through license fees, for the production of hour series given the soft off-network market for the shows. "I have to believe the pendulum will swing the other way," he said.

Stupin acknowledged that Fox has not responded quickly enough to producers this season as well as in the past and that executives are working on hastening the process of reviewing concepts and ordering pilots or scripts. However, he disputed the notion that Fox had expanded too quickly this season by pointing out that Fox's three key moves—of The Simpsons to Thursday night, America's Most Wanted to Friday night and In Living Color to an earlier slot on Sunday night—are working.

As for pilot testing at ABC, Bloomberg said sometimes programers rely too heavily on the results, "for instance when we use it as a crutch and take it too seriously." If used judiciously, he said, pilot testing is a good tool, S nterest in The Museum of Broadcasting's 8th Annual Television Festival, which starts this Wednesday and runs through March 23 at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art, has heightened with the scheduled presence of Ken Burns, producer of PBS's highly acclaimed and rated mini-series, The Civil War. That and tributes to former NBC Entertainment president and MTM Television co-founder Grant Tinker, comedians Carol Burnett and Bob Hope, commercial director Joe Sedelmaier (Wendy's "Where's the beef?" and Federal Express commercials) and former talk show host Jack Paar are among the headline events.

Describing Burns's Civil War series as "one of the only real breakthrough shows" of the 1990-91 season, Museum of Broadcasting President Bob Batscha, said that the Saturday, March 9 program (at 9:30 p.m., PT) sold out the Leo S. Bing Theater's 600 seats several weeks ago. Burns's works, besides the The Civil War, will include screenings of PBS documentaries; The Congress, Huey Long (the late governor of Louisiana) and The Shakers. Batscha said that Burns, who is in the midst of producing a new PBS documentary on the history and origins of baseball, also may have some completed segments to present at the session.

The opening of the 1991 festival, "A Salute to Grant Tinker'' will be Wednesday, 8 p.m. Tinker, who along with his then-wife Mary Tyler Moore founded MTM Enterprises in 1970, will screen highlights from such ground-breaking series as The Mary Tyler Moore Show, Hill Street Blues and St. Elsewhere. After heading up NBC's entertainment division, Tinker founded and became president of GTG Entertainment, a Los Angeles-based independent network and syndication production house. TV's top producers, writers, directors and stars like Edward Asner, Stephen Bochco, James L. Brooks, Allan Burns, James Burrows, Thomas Carter, Gary David Goldberg, Ted Danson, Sheldon Leonard, Bruce Paltrow, CBS Entertainment President Jeff Sagansky, Jay Sandrich, yrne Enterprises, a new barter syndication company based in New York, is launching two new weekly barter programs for fall 1991 and will sell the barter advertising in those shows and several others.

BYRNE EXPANDS BARTER

The company, founded last year with financial backing from Hearst Entertainment, is headed by Brian Byrne, former president, International Advertising Sales, New York, a barter sales company, and before that, executive vice president, Orbis Communications.

In addition to the proposed new weekly programs that Byrne will distribute— Desert Island Video and The Dream League—the company will also sell barter time in other programs, such as the new animated Little Mermaid from Saban Entertainment and Bohbot Communications.

Desert Island Video is a one-hour music video and celebrity interview show, hosted by singer Vanity. The show's setting is a desert island, and various celebrities are asked (among other things) what video they would choose if stranded on an island. The Dream League is a half-hour sports game show in which two teams answer sports trivia questions and compete in "physical challenges." games such as shooting baskets and batting softballs.

Byrne is currently working out of Hearst Entertainment headquarters in New York. Last year, he brought the one-hour weekly drama series Neon Rider to Hearst: the show is currently cleared in 68% of the country.

Neon Rider, produced by Atlantis Releasing of Canada, has been renewed for a second year on CTV. Ratings in U.S. syndication have been mixed for its first year.

Byrne said, however, that the program will return next year in the U.S. But Hearst and Byrne still have to decide whether to renew it in syndication or go to cable, Byrne said.

Byrne expects to do additional deals to sell barter time for other distributors. He has an existing agreement with Medstar, based in Allentown, Pa., which produces medical programs for syndication and cable. NBC Entertainment Group Chairman Brandon Tartikoff, Ed Weinberger and Hugh Wilson will discuss the impact of Tinker's contributions to the TV industry.

Most of the 17 evenings of the festival are dedicated to the study and discussion of prominent TV series, telefilms, miniseries and specials-past and present. The schedule of remaining events follows: The Simpsons, Thursday, March 7, 8 p.m.; In Living Color, Friday, March 8, 7 p.m.; Marty (a newly mastered kineoscope tape of the Paddy Chayefsky scripted play starring Rod Steiger and broadcast live on May 24, 1953 will be screened), Friday, March 8, 9:30 p.m.; Taxi, Saturday, March 9, 7 p.m.; The Tonight Show with Jack Paar, Thursday, March 13, 8 p.m.; The Law (a 1974 criminal justice telefilm produced by John Badham and starring Judd Hirsch), Friday, March 15, 9:30 p.m.; Northern Exposure, Saturday, March 16, 7 p.m.; Dream On, Saturday. March 16, 9:30 p.m.; The Dollmaker (starring Jane Fonda), Wednesday, March 20, 8 p.m.; The Trials of Rosie O'Neill, Thursday, March 21, 8 p.m.; Doogie Howser, M.D., Friday, March 22, 7 p.m.; and Brian's Song, March 22, 9:30.

FOX SIGNS COLUMNIST LIZ SMITH

P ersonalities, 20th Television's strip, signed nationally syndicated gossip and entertainment columnist Liz Smith to a two-year hitch with 20th Television (Fox), committing her to appear several times a week on the program starting on or around April 1. Under the agreement, Smith will also appear locally on the Foxowned outlet wNYW-TV New York.

Last week, Smith said she also expects to have a role in Fox's planned national news effort, currently in development. In fact, said Smith last week, "that is my chief interest." Fox has begun uplinking a nightly package of news material, although only a small number of affiliates are using it. Many other affiliates have put off plans of getting into the news business.

In addition to her print column, which appears in about 70 newspapers across the country (the flagship paper being the strike-bound New York Daily News), Smith has heretofore been a regular on wNBC-TV New York's Live at Five news magazine since it began in 1978. Smith will leave that program as of March 8. (She has actually been off the air since the start of the Persian Gulf War due to news preemptions.)

Smith expressed last week she was "sad and happy" at the turn of events. "My tenure at Live at Five has been the most wonderful work experience," she said. "But Barry Diller made me an offer I couldn't refuse."

Last year, with wNBC-TV's permission, Smith did two pilots for Fox, along the lines of Person to Person, the vintage CBS interview show. Smith may also end up doing one of those for Fox, either for the network or for syndication.

SYNDICATION MARKETPLACE

Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution reports that its fall 1991 hour talk show strip, Jenny Jones, has cleared 124 stations, 29 of the top 30 markets, representing 86% of the U.S. Top 10 markets signed are WWOR-TV New York, KNBC-TV Los Angeles, WMAQ-TV Chicago, WTXF-TV Philadelphia, KRON-TV San Francisco, WBZ-TV Boston, WRC-TV Washington, KXAS-TV Dallas, WDIV-TV Detroit and KPRC-TV Houston. Warner Bros. is offering Jones, who is also a standup comic, an even seven-minute local and national barter split.

LBS Communications has sold a half-hour pre-fight HBO special, Countdown to Holyfield/Foreman, to 45 markets with a broadcast window April 13-April 19, the evening of heavyweight title fight in Atlantic City, N.J. Program features interviews, fight footage and analysis of fighters' styles and strategies. Evander Holyfield, who became unanimous WBC, WBA and IBA heavyweight champion after knocking out Buster Douglas last September, faces George Foreman, a 42-year-old, ex-heavyweight champion turned preacher, making his ring comeback to recapture the world title. The pre-fight special, which will also air on HBO immediately before the fightcard on the cable network, has been cleared in such top markets as WPWR-TV Chicago, WGBS-TV Philadelphia, KTXA-TV Detroit, KTXH-TV Houston and wSB-TV Atlanta. LBS Communications is offering the special on a threeand-a-half-minute local and three-minute national barter basis.

GCP has cleared How to Play the Tax Game and Win, an hour-long special produced in association with MONEY magazine, a division of Time Warner Inc., on 112 stations, representing 71% of the U.S. The special offers advice on how to avoid the 10 most common and costly tax errors, and profiles people who successfully fought tax overcharges and penalties from the Internal Revenue Service. Recently added stations include WNBC-TV New York, KABC-TV Los Angeles, KRON-TV San Francisco, WKYC-TV Cleveland and KSDK-TV St. Louis. Slated to host is Dean Shepard, co-anchor of CNBC's Businessview, and anchor of segments on network's Moneywheel. GGP is offering the special on a barter basis, six-and-a-half-minutes local and six minutes national, and will satellite feed the program March 15-April 14.

The early morning news program First Business, produced and distributed by BizNet, has signed 17 new stations, including wMAQ-TV Chicago, wJBK-TV Detroit, WJW-TV Cleveland and KPRC-TV Houston. The 30-minute program, which is updated three times daily (5 a.m., 5:30 a.m. and 6 a.m., ET) from Washington, and satellite-fed to stations, now airs in 83 markets, representing 72% of the U.S. It is available on an even three-minute local and national barter basis.

Proter & Gamble has become the third partner in Buena Vista Television's year-round promotional campaign for its highly rated two-hour animated children's block, The Disney Afternoon. McDonald's and the Kellog Co. have been promotional partners since January 1990, and a Buena Vista spokeswoman said that signing Procter & Gamble is the final major link in a $100 million marketing campaign in support of four half-hour programs (Tale Spin, Chip 'n' Dale's Rescue Rangers, DuckTales and Gummi Bears). During the May-June promotional period, Procter & Gamble will be offering free Disney Adventures, the official Disney Afternoon magazine, in store displays with Crest toothpaste. Free-standing inserts will tout promotional newspapers nationally starting May 19.

In related news, Buena Vista Television Ad Sales, the national barter sales division of Buena Vista Television, completed its first wave of staffing by naming Howard Levy vice president to head the New York office; Norman Lesser as executive director, New York; Jim Engleman, vice president of sales, Midwest, Chicago; Catherine Sulmasy, account executive, New York; Eddie Meister, director of operations, New York and Noreen McGrath, director of research, New York.

RATINGS ROUNDUP

F or the week of Feb. 18-24, CBS scored its second straight weekly win, the first time the network has enjoyed consecutive wins since the 1986-87 season. CBS finished the week with a 15.1 rating and 24 share, followed by NBC with a 14.1/22 and ABC with an 11.9/19.

Powering CBS's performance last week was the two-part mini-series And the Sea Will Tell, which scored a 20.1 rating and 30 share for part one on Sunday. Feb. 24, helping the network win the night. The Grammy Awards (18.8/31) and The Miss USA Pageant (16.4/28) helped the network to win Wednesday and Friday nights, respectively. CBS also won Tuesday night with Rescue: 911 (16.1/25) and the two-hour movie, Sins of the Mother (14.5/23). In all, CBS had four of the top 10 programs, ABC three and NBC two. Fox's highest rated show was The Simpsons, which came in at number 26 with a 15.4/2.

Not surprisingly in a sweeps period, of the top 20 programs of the week, almost a third were specials, including CBS's tribute to Mary Tyler Moore, which came in at number 11, and an NBC special on the predictions of Nostradamus at 17.

CABLE

The A's and the Reds, vying for more cable carriage

SPORTS SERVICES TRY TO INCREASE MARKET SHARE BY START OF BASEBALL SEASON

ith five weeks remaining before the start of the Major League Baseball season, several regional cable sports services that carried baseball for the first time in 1990 are still working on reaching 100% of their market universe.

The world champion Cincinnati Reds, whose cable rights are held by Sports-Channel Cincinnati, aren't carried in their hometown, as Warner Cable and SportsChannel have not reached an agreement on carriage after one year of talks.

SportsChannel Bay Area (SCBA) has fared slighty better with its carriage of the San Francisco Giants and the Oakland A's. The pay service is available to roughly half the homes in the inner market, but a deal with Tele-Communications Inc., a major operator in the area, remains elusive.

Where regional sports services are not carried, the problem is often that one party wants carriage of the service on basic, the other on pay. SportsChannel has backed off its original guaranteed basic subscriber payment stance and is now showing more flexibility on the types of tiering it will allow.

The high price of many regionals makes it difficult for operators to carry them on basic. At the same time, when regionals are carried as a mini-pay or pay service, it cuts down their ability to generate advertising revenue and places much of the marketing responsibility on the operator, who is marketing other services as well.

John Mohr, president of SportsChannel's regional services, said "all new businesses" require "tremendous investment.... Anytime you have a business that loses money and takes capital expenditures, there is pressure" to get closer to profitability. Mohr acknowledges that in Cincinnati "we're behind where we'd thought we'd be," and that 1991 will be "an important year" for SCBA.

With the worsening financial environment, Mohr said, "you feel more inclined to get out and get [carriage deals] done.... We like to think we're flexible'' in negotiations with operators. Both sides, he said, "are trying to protect what you need in a difficult financial environment."

Mohr said discussions in Cincinnati have been ongoing, although Virgil Reed, president and general manager of the Warner system there said there have been no new proposals since September. SportsChannel wants to be on basic on Warner's 175,000-subscriber Cincinnati system, while Warner wants to offer it as a pay service. Reed said the cost to have the service on basic was too high without a rate increase "that was politically not possible."

Warner and SportsChannel Ohio reached an agreement for carriage as a mini-pay service late last year after months of negotiations and joint research. But that hasn't served as a model for other markets such as Cincinnati, said Mohr, because each market is different. Warner offers a 23-channel basic service for $6.95 in Cincinnati and a 54channel service for $20.95. Unlike some other MSO's, Warner has no negative option tier, where more expensive regional sports services are carried, and does not contemplate one, said Reed.

Outside Cincinnati, the service has had better success. The network reaches 200,000 basic subscribers, said Jim Corno, vice president, Midwest division, of SportsChannel, with 15,000 homes in the Cincinnati suburbs, out of a potential 300,000 homes in the inner market and 185,000 homes in the outer market (Lexington, Ky., and Terre Haute, Evansville, and Anderson, all Indiana) out of a potential 3 million homes. Large cities unsigned include Storer's Louisville, Ky. system (175,000 subscribers), and Continental in Dayton, Ohio. The Reds will be seen on Warner's Columbus, Ohio, system, as part of Sports-Channel Ohio (which carries the Cleveland Indians) there. Corno said several hundred thousand subscribers see Reds games through such carriage deals.

As for San Francisco, Mohr said SportsChannel "is always in conversations with TCI" about carriage, although discussions aren't divorced from other issues between the companies. Mohr hopes market demand will motivate other operators to carry the service.

To date, SCBA has achieved a 6% buy rate as a pay service. Mike Bair, vice president and general manager of SCBA, said the service has 50,000 pay subscribers in the inner market on systems that serve 750,000 basic subscribers. There are about 1.4 million total cable homes in the inner market.

Viacom, the other major operator in San Francisco in addition to TCI, retails SCBA at $9.95, while Cable Oakland, Heritage and Lenfest carry it at that rate or in other pay packages. The penetration figures vary, depending on when the service was launched, said Bair. "The key is strong marketing," Bair said. He believes a 10% to 14% buy rate is realistic and he hopes to be able to move penetrations to the 8% to 9% range by the end of the year, backed by a first full year of advertising and co-op marketing.

Bair said SCBA is available to 270,000 basic subscribers in its intermediate market, which serves a potential 800,000 homes. Cities include Modesto, Fresno, Stockton and Sacramento. In some intermediate market systems, SCBA is a $4.95 mini-pay or part of pay packages, as is the case in Sacramento (195,000 basic subscribers). But Bair said SCBA's goal "is to be on basic in the intermediate market," and is having discussions to those ends.

SportsChannel Ohio, which carried the Cleveland Indians for the first time last season, has had better success in inner market carriage. It is available to 675,000 cable homes, either on basic or as a mini-pay. The service is carried on basic in Cablevision Systems' Cleveland system (175,000 subscribers) and Cox's suburban Cleveland system (56,000 subscribers), SCO is available to 55,000 of the 70,000 subscribers on North Coast Cable, Cleveland's other major system. Additionally, Warner Cable carries SCO as a mini-pay in Akron, Youngstown, Columbus and Canton, which serve a total of 675,000 subscribers. But Continental and TCI systems in the area remain unsigned, representing an estimated 300,000 subscribers.

shares the name and some ties to Sports-Channel but is not owned by the same company, recently landed its first major deal with a Minneapolis area operator. MSC, which carries the Minnesota Twins, has signed a deal with King-Video Cable, serving 70,000 basic subscribers.

That will give MSC 81,000 basic subscribers in the inner market. There are another 900 subscribers on a $5.95 tier in the inner market, said Kate Samoszuk, director of marketing and affiliate relations for MSC. Overall, MSC is potentially available to 100,000 of the inner market's 350,000 subscribers.

In the outer market, MSC has 350,000 subscribers, including carriage by TCl systems on a $1.95 expanded basic tier.

Midwest Sports Channel, which

SPORTS: TICKET FOR TOUGH TIMES

That from panel on regional sports networks and PPV

s rights fees skyrocket and players' salaries follow suit, and as broadcast networks continue to lose money and viewers on their sports packages, regional sports networks and pay-per-view can be counted on to "balance the sports checkbook," according to Seth Abraham, president and chief executive officer, Time-Warner Sports.

Abraham was joined by John Severino, president of Prime Ticket Network, in a discussion of "Sports on Cable and Pay-Per-View: Rx for Economic Recovery." Their remarks were made at the 13th International Sports Summit in Los Angeles last Tuesday and Wednesday (Feb 26 and 27).

Calling the broadcast networks "old, sick, tired and weak," Severino said that although "television and cable sports rights represent the single largest pool of money available to any team or league... a drought is about to hit the television sports pool." Noting the losses recently sustained by the networks from their sports packages and, most notably, from CBS's multi-million dollar bath from Major League Baseball, he said the leagues have few areas in which to look for another revenue stream. "The owners certainly can't raise ticket prices to cover their expenses. They also can't build stadiums big enough to hold 300,000 fans.'

Severino said regional sports networks can provide sports television coverage without the enormous costs that go along with the broadcast network packages because the cable networks have signed long-term deals with the sports teams, avoiding the "frenzied competitive bidding the three networks get into every three or four years," he said.

"Knowing and controlling our longterm costs, we can plan and budget for our short term deals. If the renewal rights are just too high, we just say no. It's a philosophy the network should have used," said Severino.

Abraham said the growth of sports pay-per-view events will supplement the broadcast and cable networks and will add another stream of revenue to the equation. "If you added up what the networks are spending on their sports franchises, it's $9 billion." He then quoted Walter O'Malley, founder of the Brooklyn Dodgers, who said that "sports isn't like a business, it's like a disease." However, said Abraham, although the foundation of the business seems to be tenuous, given the wildly inflated rights fees and salaries, "the foundation is not built on sand. The television audience for sports is nearly insatiable."

He noted that Time-Warner's new pay-per-view division TVKO is already taking advantage of that viewer appetite by presenting the upcoming Evander Holyfield-George Foreman fight (see story, page 54). Scheduled for April 19, the debut event for the division is expected to generate more than $50 million worldwide. "Those numbers won't be missed by the executives of baseball, basketball and hockey, or the other sports," he said.

CTV: PUNCH LINEUPS UNVEILED FOR COMEDY SERVICE

Newly merged comedy channels hope to combine strengths of each omedy TV, now under its new moniker CTV: The Comedy Network, unveiled a programing schedule last week combining original and acquired programing from both Viacom's HA! and Time Warner's The Comedy Channel, which will merge as of April 1, HA!'s original launch date last year.

When CTV goes up on satellite, it will have 12.5 million subscribers. Announced initially as having 15 million, the network lost some subscribers from the overlap of HA! and The Comedy Channel and from the delay of anticipated cable system launches, which likely are waiting until the new network starts up, according to CTV President Robert Kreek. Kreek said he "is anticipating a few [carriage] announcements before the network launches." One of those new affiliates may or may not be Tele-Communications Inc. Kreek and Mark Rosenthal, CTV (and MTV Networks) executive vice president, affiliate sales and marketing, spent part of last week in Denver, visiting TCI, among others. While Kreek said he knows that "the conventional wisdom" is that other cable operators follow what TCI does, he stressed, "I'm not looking to TCI to handle my [affiliate] marketing for me."

Art Bell, one of the network's vice presidents of programing, stressed that CTV's inception is not being treated as a launch, but something subtler. Whatever that ends up meaning, it most certainly will be subtler than HA!'s launch, which interrupted the feeds of MTV, VH-1, and Nickelodeon, said Mike Klinghoffer, CTV's other vice president, programing. About a third of programing is original, and if repeat showings are counted, that number jumps to 41%. The ultimate goal of the network is to have 50% original programing, and it hopes to achieve that in two to three 'ears.

According to Kreek, CTV's programing, in terms of hours, is evenly split between HA! and Comedy Channel, although more HA! titles are on CTV's schedule. The Comedy Channel's emphasis on stand-up comedy will continue in prime time, while HA!'s stength during access will be continued on CTV. Klinghoffer anticipates that the network's signature shows will be Short Attention Span Theater, featuring clips and comedy news, and late night talk show Night after Night with Allan Havey (both from Comedy Channel); and from HA!, the game show Clash, English variety show London Underground, and the sketch comedy show The Unnaturals.

The network is seeking to capture a 25-40 year old audience, playing to the lower end of that age group in prime time. And CTV plans to mimic the Fox Network's philosophy of emphasizing original programing on certain nights of the week, according to Klinghoffer. "Friday night is the time we feel the networks have left open for us. Comedy is not that great on Friday nights," he said, adding that Sunday night is the next gap the networks have left and that CTA would like to fill.

Acquisitions along the lines of a Cheers or a M.A.S.H will not be available until 1996, according to Klinghoffer. But Viacom's library, which includes I Love Lucy, The Honeymooners, The Andy Griffith Show, and The Beverly Hillbillies, comes up for renewal in 1993, and CTV hopes to walk away with something.

BOXING REMAINS PPV CHAMPION

TVKO and Kingvision battle for ring audience

Ithough the pay-per-view industry is constantly in search of a new event to jump start the business, boxing remains PPV's money winner. One fight, according to Scott Kurnit, president, Showtime Event Television (SET) is equal to three to four months of revenue generated from PPV movies.

Showtime officially begins its association with boxing promoter and former HBO ally Don King on March 18, with a match between Mike Tyson and "Razor" Ruddock, in the first of what are to be quarterly "mega-fights." Plans have also called for the new partnership to create monthly "mini-megas," to begin in May. SET and Kingvision are skipping April to avoid the Time Warner Sports heavyweight title matchup between Evander Holyfield and George Foreman on April 19. Both Kingvision and Time Warner's TVKO boxing arm are also trying to get off the ground plans for monthly boxing events, but look to be going off in somewhat different directions.

SET and King's newly dubbed Kingvision are spending $3 million in advertising and marketing on the match, which King predicts will get a 10% buy rate. With the March 18 fight a couple of weeks away, SET said it has signed up all cable MSO's to carry the fight, except United Artists. Greg DePrez, vice president, PPV, acknowledged that UA is "presently not licensed to carry the fight. It's very hard to say if we will." He added it was unlikely that individual UA systems would pick up the fight. SET has faced some displeasure from cable operators who think the rates are too high for a non-title fight. The splits are 50-50 for a $.75-per-subscriber guarantee, 40% for a $.50-cent guarantee, and 60% for a $1.25 guarantee. But, not surprisingly, King claims the Tyson/ Ruddock match is more of a fight than the April Holyfield/Foreman bout. "Holyfield never beat a legitimate contender. The Tyson-Ruddock match is a championship fight whether they put the crown on it or not," King said.

When SET and King announced their parternship last December, they had said that the monthly boxing card would be on PPV (see BROADCASTING, Dec. 25, 1990), but it may in fact end up on Showtime itself, even as early as the first match. "We haven't yet decided about the May card. If the fight isn't worth it, we won't put it on pay per view," said Kurnit.

What makes a fight worth it for SET is at least a 1% buy rate, he said, although King is optimistic that a 3% buy rate can be achieved on the monthly fights. Kurnit also noted that even if a fight gets only a .2% buy rate, cable operators will bring in the same revenue as they would with most movies.

The monthly fight concept itself might not even be the way Showtime chooses to go. "It's the concept now, but Don may decide differently," said Kurnit. At the same time, SET and King want to find some way to make fights consistent. Each fight will be marketed individually, not "as a series, like a Twin Peaks," said King. "We're looking for a level of continuity though, and the Kingvision name provides that."

In the other corner of the ring, Time Warner Sports is getting ready for the launch of its TVKO boxing series with the April 19 match between Evander Holyfield and George Foreman. That is to be the first of what TVKO plans to be two mega-fights each year, according to Time Warner Sports president Seth Abraham. TVKO seems to be dealing more heavily through Viewer's Choice and Request, in working with them to reach cable operators, except those with standalone systems. "We don't expect any clearance problems," said Mark Taffet, Time Warner Sports, senior vice president, programing operations.

Like Kingvision, TVKO is expecting its fight to beat the 7.3% buy rate the Holyfield/Buster Douglas bout got in October, and maybe even cross the 10% buy rate line. According to Taffet, most operators, confident that the fight will perform well, are going for the 50-50 split, for which they pay a $1 guarantee. For $.75 cents, operators get 40% of the revenue; they get 30% for no guarantee. About $8 million to $10 million will be spent on marketing and advertising, although about $5 million of that is through barter arrangements for print. TV, and radio time, said Taffet. And TVKO has available the hefty resources of its parent company, everything from editorial coverage and ads in Sports IIlustrated to using Bugs Bunny in TV spots, to promoting the fight at its Six Flags amusement parks.

Time Warner Sport is heralding its April mega-fight as the launch of TVKO. "We have to come through every month. It's the whole premise of our business," said Taffet. TVKO has year commitments with Viewer's Choice and Request, as well as its major sponsor, Budweiser. The price will be slightly below $20. and TVKO will test price lower points by offering subscription packages. "We have to be consistent because we're telling cable operators to reallocate time and promote us. If we miss a month, those guys will fall off their marketing schedules." said Taffet, who added he believes the stable of boxers represented by TVKO partners and boxing promoters Bob Arum and Dan Duva will make sure plenty of fights are available.

Taffet said "it won't take much for us to make money" on those fights. If TVKO does less than a 1% buy rate, it can still break even, he said.

The next fight scheduled is a May 10 card, headlined by Michael Nunn and Michael Carbajal, and TVKO is currently working on its May and June cards.

Whether there is room for both Kingvision and TVKO is a question that remains unanswered. King, though, still bitter about his fallout with HBO, said he does not think he's got anything to worry about. -som

Trying to widen distribution of its National Hockey League package and maybe even score some points with the NHL, SportsChannel America will make its 1991 Stanley Cup Championship coverage available to cable operators not affiliated with SCA. SCA, which is currently in negotiations to try to hold onto all or part of the NHL package, will offer cable operators the opportunity to purchase two months of playoff coverage. The price will be higher than SCA's discounted rates and will require that operators carry the programing as a basic service to give SCA the highest distribution possible. Operators can either take SCA's full programing lineup. or choose only the hockey coverage. The Stanley Cup playoffs begin Wednesday, April 3, and go through late May. Last year, SCA televised 73 Stanley Cup games. SCA hopes to get 4 million to 5 million new households with this offer.

technology. Cablevision gained PCS approval for New York, Boston, Chicago and Cleveland, in licenses that run until Jan. 1, 1993.

Wilt Hildenbrand, Cablevision vice president, engineering, said the company will concentrate on acquiring equipment and conducting technical propagation tests in the early months of the test. Companies are required to submit progress reports to the FCC every 90 days. Although PCS capability would allow cable operators to provide some types of telephone service, Cablevision is also looking at using PCS to enhance cable system functions.

CONUS ADDING NORTHEAST TO ITS REGIONAL MAP

That section of country is latest co-op to be set up toward goal of nine spread across nation by this summer onus Communications plans later this month to kick off its Northeast regional cooperative, bringing the satellite news gathering system closer to its goal of establishing nine regional coops nationally by summer. According to the Conus plan, by July 1 co-op members will have access to more than a half-dozen additional stories from their region on a daily basis.

Under the new co-op system, regional editorial decisions will revert to the stations within that particular region. The system will differ from the current process, whereby the Conus editorial board in Minneapolis each day calls about a dozen stations in an area to decide which one or two stories will represent that particular region on the national feeds.

The new system calls for station assignment editors in a particular region to participate in a brief morning conference call during which they select several regional stories for exchange that day. A full-time Conus regional coordinator based in the region then arranges to transmit more than a half-dozen of those stories during an afternoon satellite feed.

About 105 television stations currently participate in the Conus Satellite News Cooperatives, whereby stations exchange news coverage, taped and live, on a daily basis and collaborate on custom coverage of breaking and planned news events. Conus distributes to its members' eight daily national feeds, each 15-45 minutes long. The nine regional feeds, which will be available to all Conus members, will be added to that daily distribution.

The first of the regional Conus coops, the Austin-based Southwest regional co-op, began full operations last month with the linking of nine member stations in Oklahoma and Texas. Participating stations include KTUL-TV Tulsa, KXAS-TV Fort Worth, KPRC-TV Houston, KWTX-TV Waco, KWTV(TV) Oklahoma City, KTPX(TV) Odessa, KBTX-TV Bryan, KVIA-TV El Paso and regional hub KXAN-TV Austin.

The jury is still out on how well the regional co-op system will work among the participating stations in the Southwest. Assignment editors at stations involved in the project said the Conus Southwest regional co-op is somewhat redundant because of particularly strong existing news cooperatives in the region.

KWTX-TV Waco and other CBS affiliates in the region already participate in CBS Southwest, a well-established regional cooperative organized by the network, said station assignment editor Rick Bradfield. NBC affiliates have Texnet, a similar regional feed established by their own network.

"This isn't a good time to step back and look at it," said Bradfield, particularly because the Southwest Conus coop is just one month old and stations are concentrating on Persian Gulf coverage. "Frankly, it's a little bit early to tell."

Early experience with the Southwest co-op has proven valuable in getting story ideas from other stations in the region, said Denis King, executive producer of KTUL-TV Tulsa. But the impact of the new co-op plan is limited, he said, because KTUL already had a good exchange system in place with Oklahoma co-op member KWTV, and the station does not regularly need reports from Texas.

"A lot of stations have done this on their own over the years, but we're going to be able to develop a more closeknit group among the stations," said Steve Johnson, Conus managing editor, special projects and product development. The full-time Conus coordinator who will be based in each region will serve as a primary unifying factor and will look for opportunities to establish several live interacts among the stations.

Johnson said future regional co-op plans by Conus call for a late March start for its Northeast co-op, which will be based at wwOR-TV Secaucus, N.J. (New York). Other regional co-ops to be established by Conus in upcoming weeks will include the Ohio-based Great Lakes region: the Upper Midwest and Lower Midwest regions, both likely to be based in Minneapolis; the Rocky Mountain region, to be based at KOB-TV Albuquerque; the Atlantic Coast region, and the West Coast region, with the last possibly based at KCAL(TV) Los Angeles.

Conus also plans to formalize its regional service in Florida, where stations have traded several daily stories through Conus for more than three years. Conus, which has traditionally organized Florida exchanges through its Minneapolis base, plans to establish a Florida hub and place a full-time coordinator in the region.

PARAMOUNT ACQUIRES TVX GROUP

$9.50-per-share offer accepted, giving studio six stations and almost 10% national reach; proxy statement reveals bullish outlook for station group.

Paramount Communications is set to acquire the remaining 17% of TVX Broadcast Group that the entertainment company does not already own, giving it a station group that reaches almost 10% of the nation's television viewers and an outlet for its syndicated programing.

Approval by TVX shareholders, which came last week, cleared the way for Paramount to close on its $9.50-pershare offer on the group owner of six independent stations—four of which are in top-10 markets. The merger price, including consulting fees and expenses, comes to about $60 million and was expected to close by last Friday (March 1).

In TVX, Paramount acquires the following: Fox affiliates WTXF-TV Philadelphia; WLFL-TV Raleigh; KRRT(TV) San Antonio, Tex., and independent stations WDCA-TV Washington, KTXA(TV) Dallas and KTXH(TV) Houston. Paramount chairman and chief executive officer Martin Davis said the acquisition provides Paramount with "a strategic entree to broadcasting and an outstanding fit with our programing and syndication expertise."

Like Davis, industry analysts see the acquisition as a way for Paramount to gain broadcast experience, while at the same time insuring distribution of Paramount programing in crucial markets. Chris Dixon, securities analyst, Kidder, Peabody & Co., said in a recent report that TVX "appears well positioned to gain market share as the television universe continues to fractionalize." Whether the fact that three of the stations are Fox affiliates will interfere with Paramount plans remains to be seen. In the proxy statement outlining the merger, Paramount states that it "does not intend to sell or otherwise dispose of all or any part of the company or its assets." Davis also said Paramount looks forward to "...broadening our broadcast operations as opportunities appear.'

With regard to purchasing other broadcast properties. Paramount would not elaborate beyond what Davis said in the TVX announcement. The property that would appear to be most appealing to Paramount is Pineland Inc.'s WWOR-TV New York, the independent station that MCA had to spin off to complete its merger with Matsushita. Paramount is one of three companies thought to be ideal suitors for the station, the others being Disney and Chris-Craft.

Also included in the proxy are business projections and "non-public" financial information on TVX. The most recent of these projections was done last December for the year ending December 31, 1991. Operating revenue for the station group without agency compensation is projected to be $159,058,261, with profit operating estimated at $37,597,703 and net cash projected to be $31,370,336; net profit is estimated to be $5,213,709. Operating expenses are projected at $66.810.740, and film amortization costs аге put at $54,649,818.

A five-year forecast is also provided in the proxy. Those projections are par-

NTA SPREADS GOOD WORD ON NETWORKS

Association backed by ABC, CBS and NBC is still defining its mission

Ithough it may be one of the smallest trade associations in terms of staff and membership and has only been around for 11 months, the Network Television Association (NTA), which represents ABC, CBS and NBC, is one of the more closely watched associations both because of its mission and its clientele.

That mission, to "build greater awareness of network television's attributes as an advertising medium." is no small task considering the assault the networks' audience and advertising revenue has been under from the growth of cable, syndication. Fox and others. To lead this charge, Fox tapped Peter Chrisanthopoulos, president and chief operating officer of RJR Nabisco Broadcast, to be president and chief executive officer of the NTA. Prior to joining RJR Nabisco Inc., Chrisanthopoulos was prime time supervisor of broadcast programing and purchasing for Young &

NTA President-CEO Chrisanthopoulos

Rubicam. In choosing his staff, he hired seven people from the advertiser/agency sector. Said Chrisanthopoulos on his hiring strategy: "[NTA] speaks the same language as the advertisers and has a sales mentality." A 10-person board made up of Chrisanthopoulos and three people each from ABC, CBS and NBC oversees the association.

Shortly after the NTA's formation and the hiring of Chrisanthopoulos was announced (BROADCASTING April 9, 1990), a flashy print campaign was launched emphasizing the reach of network television. The campaign was short-lived, and since then the association has chosen to operate more on the inside—releasing studies showing the value of network verses cable and making presentations to advertisers and agencies.

Early on, the association became involved in a mini-war with the Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau (CAB) over research methodology, prompting one agency executive later to comment that the association "needs to identify real issues, not just react to others."

Reaction to the association from advertisers and agencies has been mixed. Most agree that the networks need a trade association, and many wondered why such an association was not launched years earlier, when audience erosion first became apparent. However, they also wonder how effective the association can be, since it is made up of three companies who spend most of their time and energy competing against each other. One media buyer described it as a United Nations where agencies can air out problems. "None of us," the media buyer added, "expected innovation."

What media buyers want (and what NTA plans to give them) is more research. Betsy Frank, senior vice president, Saatchi & Saatchi, said she hopes to see the association address, among other things, the clutter issue.

Aaron Cohen, a senior vice president at NW Ayer and the chairman of the American Association of Advertising Agencies broadcast network and programing committee, agreed that more studies may be the way for the association to go. "The studies are given consideration, and the recent study [on advertising during war coverage] gives credence to the other studies...too often we operate from ignorance and gut reaction."

The association is a non-profit organization financed by the three networks. The networks have not said how much they are spending on NTA, but industry sources estimate each will put in be-ost cable and broadcast stocks posted a slight retreat, going against the broader market which was slightly higher according to indices for the week ending last Wednesday (Fcb. 27). Some of the more highly leveraged stocks, however, posted gains, including News Corp., up 9.4%; Cablevision Systems, up 18%, and Adelphia, up 12%. A possible "short squeeze" may have accounted for some of the gains; recently released short interest figures through Feb. 15 show little change in the short position in News Corp., while that of Cablevision Systems was up 18%, to 68 times the average daily trading volume. Short positions in several other MSO stocks also increased, including Tele-Communications Inc., up 12%: Jones Intercable, up 38%; Comcast, up 14%, and Century Communications, up 29%.

Shares of Financial News Network rose, to 13/32, possibly on the higher bid for the company made by NBC. Interpublic Group stock was up 5%, coincident with an improved earnings report, while shares of A.C. Nielsen's parent company, Dun & Bradstreet, fell 4% coincident with the company's projection of a drop in its first-quarter earnings.

Stock Index Notes: T-Toronto, A-American, N-NYSE, O-NASDAQ. Bid prices and common A stock used unless otherwise noted. P/E ratios are based on earnings per share for the previous 12 months as published by Standard and Poor's or as obtained by Broadcasting's own research.

ticularly bullish, with net revenue anticipated to grow from $153,230,000, in 1990, to $235,876,000 in 1995. a 9% compound annual rate. Considering the current state of the broadcasting industry and the exact numbers in the projection, Paramount is very optimistic about the growth of these stations.

Operating profit for the same time period is also expected to grow solidly, $34,948,000 in 1990 to $100.281,000 in 1995, a 23.4% compound annual growth rate. Net profit is projected to grow from $6,639,000 in 1990 to $81,011,000 in 1995, a compound annual growth rate of 65%. Net cashflow for 1990-1995 is projected to grow from $31,125,000 in 1990 to $86,407,000 in 1995, a compound annual growth rate of almost 22%.

Current TVX management, the proxy said, will remain in place, with the exception of Gene Loving's position as TVX chairman, which will be eliminated. Loving's future with the company is unknown. Paramount will rework the TVX board so that only Paramount employes are members.

Paramount first became involved with TVX in 1989, when it paid $110 million in cash and $30 million in notes to Salomon Brothers to buy 79% of the company at about $5 per-share.

Going into the association's second year, Chrisanthopoulos is planning on more presentations and studies, including one forthcoming that deals with the clutter issue in network versus other media.

One might think that network affiliates would react negatively to an association that promotes the networks over other media, including spot television. However, Chrisanthopoulos has met three times with the Television Affiliate Group—an association of network affiliates—and may work with the group in the future. He was also well-received last week in Washington when he made a presentation before the meeting of NBC affiliates.

Although media buyers are not heaping praise on the association, they are, for the most part, confident that in time it could become a force. Said Bart Mc-Hugh, senior vice president, director of national TV and radio, DDB Needham: "Something like this get going in a minute. These three have too many years behind them as competitors...it will take time. What was the CAB [Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau] 10 years ago?"

FCC GIVES USER FEE PLAN TO HILL

Broadcasters would have to pony up $4.9 million, cable, $9.3 million; congressmen take opportunity to air fin-syn concerns

he FCC expects to collect up to $4.9 million in annual "user fees" from radio and TV broadcasters (see chart, right), according to a proposal unveiled last week by FCC Chairman Alfred Sikes. Under the same proposal, cable's contribution would be $9.3 million.

Sikes discussed the fees with members of a House Appropriations Subcommittee panel last week. The FCC estimates it can raise $70 million annually from the fees, which would be levied against those doing business with the commission. For example, the agency hopes to collect up to $25.3 million from mobile radio, cellular radio, satellite operators, long distance and local phone companies.

Additionally, some subcommittee members used the hearing as an opportunity to express an interest in the FCC's proposed fin-syn rulemaking (see "Top of the Week").

The user fees would be in addition to the $41 million the agency says it will collect this year from filing and processing charges. President Bush's proposed fiscal 1992 budget called for a new user fee as a means of fighting the federal deficit (BROADCASTING, Feb. 11). The FCC would keep $65 million to cover the cost of doing business with the remainder going to the Treasury Department. It is up to Congress to authorize the user fee in legislation.

Sikes also appeared before the subcommittee to discuss the agency's request of $133.4 million for its fiscal 1992 budget, $17.6 million more than the commission received in its FY '91 appropriation. The additional funds would be used to hire 38 new employes in the common carrier bureau. The commission also plans to use the resources to devote more attention to high definition television and toward the development of other new high-technology communications services. Sikes said the commission needs to upgrade its computer system. Subcommittee Chairman Neal Smith (D-Iowa), however, was not optimistic about the chances that Congress will meet that request.

Moreover, Smith and Carr foresee other problems associated with enactment of a user fee. Carr said the House Ways and Means Committee may view it as a tax and feel the appropriation committee's action in this area is an invasion of its jurisdiction. The FCC's authorizing committee, Energy and Commerce, is also likely to take an interest in the proposal. "I don't know how we can work it out," said Smith. "We want to work it out," he added.

Under the proposed fee schedule, AM and FM radio operators would account for $2.7 million, and TV $2.2 million. For example, an FM station (class C, C1, C2, or B) would have to pay an annual fee of $500, a VHF TV $3,000 and a UHF $1,000. Noncommercial radio and TV stations would pay $100 dollars apiece, making their contibution to the kitty $135,100 and $35,000.

Cable systems would have to pay $150 for the cable antenna relay service (CARS) plus $300 for each cable franchise. The FCC expects to collect a total of $324,750 from cable operators for their CARS license and about $9 million from a cable franchise charge.

The fee schedule did not go over well with the National Association of Broadcasters. NAB spokesman Walt Wurfel said broadcasters already spend "considerable resources to serve the public interest." The user fee proposal, he said, is "inconsistent" with broadcasters public service role. Moreover, the fees place a "fiscal burden on the many stations which already operate at a loss."

The National Cable Television Association also was not pleased. An NCTA spokesman said: "On first blush it's hard to see why we should be paying licensing fees to the federal government when we already pay more than $800 million per year to our local franchising authorities."

"We are obviously concerned." said David Donovan, vice president, legal and legislative affairs. Association of Independent Television Stations, "the user fee moves us toward a payment-forspectrum-system—something that was never envisioned by the framers of the Communications Act."

LAW FIRM LOOKS TO GIVE LENDERS PIECE OF BROADCAST ACTION

Hogan & Hartson asks FCC to allow lenders to take security interest in FCC license s the financial drought for broadcasters drags on, even a small drop of relief would be welcome. Whether or not Hogan & Hartson's petition asking the FCC to make it possible for lenders to take a "security" thirdparty interest in an FCC license ("In Brief," Feb. 25) will have any impact in this dry lending season remains to be seen. Many believe the measure, if adopted, would do little more than increase a lender's perceived comfort zone, but that alone might mean, as communications consultant Susan Harrison of Harrison. Bond and Pecaro put it. "that the perfectly good and economically sound deal that should have been made last year will get done this year."

Others, however, caution that the FCC may react to the petition in a way that perceptually undermines the intricate system of broadcast lending that is dependent on assumptions, good faith and confidence.

Lenders often require collateral in addition to a station's assets because loans are made based on a percentage of the station's market value, essentially its FCC license, but no lien can be put on that license, which under FCC policy is not considered an asset and cannot be attached.

A recent bankrupcty proceeding, however, has cast some doubt on whether lenders are entitled to security based on the market value (which implies the transferability of an FCC license) or only on the station's assets. In re Oklahoma City Broadcasting Co., dba KGMC-TV, the station, in Chapter 11, had two offers for the assets (would-be purchasers intended to buy other Oklahoma City independents, consolidate them and return the left-over licenses to the FCC). In 1988, prior to the bankruptcy filing, Pappas Telecasting made a similar offer to purchase KGMC. Oklahoma is said by some, including the bankruptcy judge, to be overserved by independent stations. Because the offers (including Pappas') did not intend to keep KGMC as "a going concern." the court said that the lenders' claims were worth no more than the liquidation value of the station's assets. Incidentally, KGMC, three independents and a Fox affiliate are still on the air in Oklahoma City.

Stephen Meredith, of Boston-based Edwards & Angell said "if [lenders] find themselves in bankruptcy, Oklahoma City [might] be thrown into their faces." Security in the license, he said, "changes the game quite a bit…banks could foreclose without a court order."

Lawyers. bankers and analysts seem to agree on at least one thing: Oklahoma City is not likely to become "the law of the land," as communications attorney Erwin Krasnow put it; the unique situation of the case and the "poorly reasoned and internally inconsistent" decision of the bankruptcy judge made it unlikely to be used in other jurisdictions.

But the ruling has nevertheless made many broadcasters, bankers and lawyers uncomfortable. Hogan & Hartson's petition seeks to codify what lenders have always taken for granted.

Susan Wing, partner at Hogan & Hartson and one of the petition's authors, admitted that the petition is a "response to a dry capital market... When station prices were rising, lenders weren't concerned about liquidation, but with the market for resale tighter, liquidation is a potential reality...I'm not suggesting that banks will make loans they otherwise would not...but this gives them an additional comfort zone."

Blackburn and Co.'s investment banking specialist, Susan Byer, said a ruling might "protect lender[s] a little more [and] make them a little bit more comfortable." She added that if the FCC inadvertently damaged the existing system, "it could have serious ramifications for broadcasters."

Conversely, Byer doubted that a favorable ruling would substantially improve the lending environment. She said: "Loans are based on performance-...most lenders are cautious enough that they feel fairly well protected."

Harrison said that, "assuming other lending community restrictions were relaxed, such as HLT's (highly leveraged transactions), the ability to take security in a license could add substantially to a borrower's collateral, which, in theory, would increase the availability of capital." But she said, and others agreed, that collateral has little to do with performance, projections or abilities. Broadcasters having difficulty paying off existing debt (based on less collateral) probably cannot manage any more.

The dust raised by the petition might, however, be much ado about nothing. As Harrison put it: "It runs against what the FCC has done for 50 years." -PJS

NO SPECTRUM FEE SAYS HOLLINGS

N BC affiliates attending last week's mid-season meeting in Washington heard good news from Senator Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.), chairman of the Commerce Committee. Hollings assured the group that there would be "no spectrum fee."

The chairman also said he hoped to move a cable reregulation bill this year. Hollings urged the broadcasters to sit down with cable industry officials and "work out" an agreement on must carry and a retransmission consent fee. He told them that if they came to Congress with a deal, the Hill would approve it. Congress, he said, would not put broadcasters "out of business."

He later told BROADCASTING that he knows broadcasters are divided over how to approach the must-carry issue. Some stations would rather extract a retransmission consent fee from cable operators instead of obtaining guaranteed carriage. But the smaller stations, Hollings said, want must carry.

Hollings admitted that the White House is opposed to cable reregulation, which might change how the Republicans will vote on the measure. Still, he thinks the votes are in the committee to pass legislation. Furthermore, he believes there is a need for a bill even if the FCC redefines effective competition. The senator also expressed confidence in the FCC. "I think we've got a good FCC," he told the NBC affiliates.

CCD: THE LAST WORD IN TV CAMERAS

Manufacturers to offer refinements, including improved light sensitivity; other technologies on display include new automation systems

ach year since the early 1980's, when charge-coupled device (CCD) cameras were introduced as broadcast products, manufacturers have effected some small or large enhancement in the technology. Gradually, they have overtaken sales of tube cameras both for the field and, more recently, the studio.

Sony Corp., for example, only began selling studio CCD cameras at last year's National Association of Broadcasters equipment exhibition in Atlanta. In less than 12 months, it has sold more than 100 of them. "It has been extremely successful to the point where we have gotten to the best of my knowledge, no inquiries since then for studio tube cameras. That market has basically dropped out," said Dave Doherty, vice president, marketing, Sony camera products.

Entering the Las Vegas Convention Center, April 15-18, the most significant CCD enhancement will be the introduction of Sony's Hyper-HAD chips to its entire CCD camera line.

Last year's Sony NAB camera display featured cameras with its HAD (hole accumulated diode) sensors, designed to increase the horizontal resolution and color imaging of its CCD camera. By last fall, Sony had unveiled its nextgeneration sensor, Hyper HAD, designed to increase light sensitivity. The sensors were installed in all Sony highend studio and field FIT (frame-interline transfer) cameras. By NAB, Hyper HAD will be integrated into the lowercost IT (interline transfer) CCD cameras as well.

Hyper HAD increases sensitivity through OCL (on-chip lens) technology, a new Sony-developed feature. OCL is "an array of microscopic lenses actually built into a layer of the CCD imager itself that focuses virtually all of the light into active sensors," Doherty said. "In a typical CCD imager, only about 35% of the light goes on to active pixel sensors. The other 65% dissipates on the chip." Almost all of that light is saved with OCL. CCD camera sensitivity is increased the equivalent of one film camera f-stop.

Automation is another technology affecting camera sales and studio applications. There will again be three major manufacturers of remote camera control and robotic camera pedestal systems showing enhancements to their products at NAB. One of those players, Bob Gonnelli, president, Total Spectrum Manufacturing (TSM), Valley Cottage, N.Y., has been complaining about the lack of adequate interfaces between cameras, robotic camera systems and other forms of remote-control equipment in the studio. Customers are often disappointed when their new robotic camera systems, studio cameras, newsroom computers and other systems do not interface as well in their stations as they did on the NAB exhibit floor, he said.

Gonnelli attracted some attention to the problem during the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers equipment exhibition in a joint announcement with Broadcast Television Systems (BTS), Salt Lake City, of an interface between the BTS cameras and an eight-camera TSM system (BROAD-CASTING, Oct. 29, 1990). "If that engineer decides that TSM makes a very fine automation system and is undecided about cameras," TSM will be able to guarantee a smooth interface with BTS.

Since the TSM-BTS announcement, he said, there have been signs other manufacturers are beginning to treat the problem, but much remains to be done. "We went through a phase back in the 70's when automation was interfacing products. It was a hot concept everybody pitched. But they let the market down. The stuff that was available didn't do what it promised to do," Gonnelli said: "Then we went through a stage in the 80's where nobody wanted to believe in it any more." Another phase of over-promising threatens to damage confidence in robotic and automated systems again, he said.

All equipment enhancements shown in the TSM NAB booth will be fully tested and operable, Gonnelli promised. Several new products will be introduced, he said, although he was ready to announce only one now, the ACP-4000S, an outdoor portable 4-camera, touch-screen controlled system developed by TSM at the request of ABC Sports. The system will be ideal for coverage of many sports and video program production applications, he said.

One of TSM's rivals, A.F. Associates, Northvale, N.J., U.S. marketer of British-manufactured Radamec EPO robotic camera equipment, will introduce a new software package for its RoboPed robotic pedestal. The new 'On-Air'' package is designed to ''teach'' the robotic camera systems the specific pans, tilts, zooms, focuses and floor positions it should automatically adjust to during a typical newscast. ''The system then links all of the shots together giving a smooth on-air look to complex moves that could not have been previously obtained by a camera operator.''

Matsushita's Panasonic Broadcast Systems Co., Secaucus, N.J., announced only that it will again be showing its AJ-D310, the first all-digital camcorder. The camera, which has been available for delivery since late last year, uses all-digital processing and records in Matsushita's half-inch digital tape format. In addition, co-owned Panasonic Communications & Systems Co., specializing in lower-cost professional and industrial video systems, will introduce its first digital processing camera, the WV-F700. The camera will image 750 lines of resolution, Panasonic says.

France's Thomson Broadcast Inc. will introduce its first FIT versions of its TTV 1542 studio camera and TTV 1647 field camera for the U.S. market. "The first introduction was at IBC [International Broadcasting Convention in England last fall] in a 625-line version. This will be the first time in 525," Thomson's Alan Pecot said. Both cameras will be available for delivery about a month after NAB. Prices will be announced at the show.

JVC Professional Products Co., Elmwood, N.J., will demonstrate production versions of its KY-90U FIT and KY-35U IT CCD cameras, both shown as prototypes at NAB 1990. Shipments of the cameras are scheduled to begin this spring. JVC will also spotlight the earlier-introduced GY-X1 TCU, "the first 3-CCD S-VHS-C (8 mm format) camcorder," according JVC's Ellin Everson. The GY-X1 sells for $7,195 and will also begin shipment this spring.

Ampex Corp., Redwood City, Calif., which licenses the rights to manufacture and market Sony's Betacam SP camera systems, could not announce its camera introductions last week. It did say, however, that it will again demonstrate lighting systems manufactured by Videssence, San Francisco, at its camera display. Ampex is handling marketing of the Videssence ionic lighting systems, which radiate almost no heat and, according to the Videssence, radically reduce power consumption compared to systems. conventional fluorescent Videssence and Ampex announced the sale of two ionic systems last week, a news studio set for KGET(TV) Bakersfield, Calif., and several sets to TV Ontario for its news and public affairs coverage. Portable Videssence systems will be displayed by Ultimatte Corp. at NAB. -PMS

HDTV SUBJECTIVE TEST DELAY FEARED

The systems subcommittee of the FCC's advisory committee on advanced television service learned scheduled subjective testing could be delayed by a month because of delays in deliveries of a key piece of equipment, the Advanced Television Test Center's (ATTC) format converter. The Advanced Television Evaluation Laboratory (ATEL) in Canada, which is to perform subjective tests on the proposed HDTV trasmission systems systems in a parallel schedule with ATTC lab tests, needs the devise to begin its task.

ATEL had originally planned to complete the subjective tests by July 1992, barely in time for the data to be included in the advisory committee's final report. A delay in the subjective tests could delay completion of the final report. The final report, scheduled for submission in September 1992, will give the FCC the advisory committee's recommendation for a high-definition standard.

ATTC contracted Tektronix Inc. to build the format converter, which allows for specially encoded video test materials taped in the 1,126/60 format to be played back in other formats better suited for each individual system. ATTC Executive Director Peter Fannon said a prototype of the format converter has been delivered by Tektronix to Captain, the New York highdefinition studio that is using the device to produce video test materials for ATTC. The prototype format converter is operating smoothly, Fannon said.

AMPEX HEAD SAYS COMPANY IS BACK ON TRACK

In rare interview, Edward Bramson says layoffs are over and company's R&D teams are working on new products mpex Corp., Redwood City, Calif., the first company to market a practical videotape recorder back in the 1950's which became the last American-owned videotape equipment manufacturer in the 1980's, is financially sound, according to Edward J. Bramson, owner, president and chief operating officer. In a rare interview with BROADCASTING last week, Bramson denied rumors that Ampex is about to be sold to either domestic or foreign interests. The hundreds of layoffs within the company over the past year have ended, he said.

"We've talked about perceptions.... We've talked about the reality of what we're doing, which is our products," Bramson said. "What you really want to have happen is the perceptions and the reality to come together so that the warm feelings people have about the company become justified."

The perceptions surrounding Ampex in recent years have often been negative. The company laid off about 700 employes, representing 10% of its work force, between December 1989 and January 1991. Revenues in recent years have been flat at about $700 million, affected in part by the current recession and cuts in government spending on some Ampex systems. Bramson is constantly dogged by rumors he is planning to sell or fold Ampex due to heavy debt. His three chief goals for the next several months, he said, are to quell the uneasiness about the layoffs, implement a more decentralized management style "in which you essentially set a direction and trust the people who have done it before to go and get it done," and redirect product development teams.

Bramson, 39, was born and educated in Britain and emigrated to the U.S. in 1975 to accept an accountancy job in New York. The following year he bought a small company. "In the process of organizing the financing for it, I got really involved in the thing ... and shortly after began running it," he said. His later financial successes grew from there. Bramson now owns four companies in industries ranging from broadcast equipment to chemical manufacturing. One of those companies, Lanesborough (later renamed Sherbourne Corp. Corp.), acquired Ampex in April 1987 for $479 million plus assumption of debt, financed in large part with loans and securities. Until this year, Bramson has rarely spoken to the press on Ampex matters and has left business and technology decisions to Ampex management.

With the recent resignation of Ronald J. Ritchie as Ampex president and chief executive officer, Bramson decided to move from the East Coast to Redwood City to take personal control of Ampex (BROADCASTING, Jan. 21). "I wanted to be more involved. I've been associated with Ampex for four years, and over time I've come to feel more comfortable in judging what we ought to do," Bramson said. "What we do is guite complex. It takes quite a long time to put things in perspective. I've gone out and talked to a lot of customers." What Bramson found was a deep respect for Ampex's traditional image as a technology leader, but that fitting the technology to the business needs of the customers has become key.

Ritchie's departure was not a firing, but a matter of mutual agreement, he said. "I think the issue is that when you have two people with a fair amount of business experience, it makes sense for one of them to [run the company], so it turns out I'm going to do it," Bramson said.

As Ritchie left, Ampex announced the completion of the final 150 layoffs in a round of 350 begun last November. At the same time, a letter was sent to all the company's remaining employes to promise the layoffs had ended.

New product development will receive greater attention in 1991. The level of research and development funding in recent years-10% of sales-will re-main the same. "Now that we've finished some very big projects, we've got the people and resources to put into new things," Bramson said. The teams that developed and perfected the D-2 (composite digital) videotape format, for example, are now free to apply digital technology to other areas. Three new product development teams have been formed. Bramson declined to give details on those teams' missions. "We've got some non-television products that we're working on, but everything that will be launched will be television-related," he said.

One project already announced involves boxes designed to ease the transition cost of today's composite analog TV studios to the coming component digital studios. One of the links in the transition is the ADAPT digital layering system (to be introduced at the National Association of Broadcasters convention in April), which will produce multigenerational effects equivalent to component digital systems while interfacing with conventional composite analog production switchers (BROADCASTING, Jan. 28). The ultimate goal of that project is the development of an affordable component digital switcher in the mid-1990's.

The "non-television" but "television-related" projects Bramson mentioned could involve some of the strategic alliances Ampex has been attempting to form over the past year. The aim is to find ways to blend Ampex's digital television technology expertise with other high-tech industries. "Digital recording has a very high data rate, higher than you really need it for computing. As computers get faster, you have more need for high-speed storage when you just have more data to store. When TV recorders became digital, it created a business opportunity," Bramson said. Bramson's goal is for product an-

Bramson's goal is for product announcements stemming from the three new development teams some time in 1992. His hopes and expectations are that they will attract a significant increase in business. That is when he predicts currently negative perceptions will meet positive reality. -RMS

Network radio special report

viding programing that appeals to a broad spectrum of the Hispanic population. "Within the collection of Spanishlanguage stations there's a range of formats, based on music or talk or other programing. Some formats are more popular in certain geographical areas of the country than in others. A station in McAllen, Tex., is going to sound very different from one in Miami. We're a national service, so we have to adapt our programing to appeal to a wide range of audience.''

Kiernan said this broad range is the main reason CBS has focused on baseball and football and Christmas music, "event programs that Hispanics would respond to no matter where their heritage lies." He said that, while subgroups among the Hispanic audience are very real, "the perception of those differences might be greater than the reality."

Judging from the network's acceptance with both stations and advertisers, Kiernan observed that "Hispanic is a very rewarding market. It has great opportunities for growth over and above what you might find in the general market, because it's expanding so quickly."

BRN OUTLASTS 24-HOUR BUSINESS COMPETITION

n a highly competitive marketplace that in the last year has seen two 24hour business-oriented radio networks fold their cards, Colorado Springs-based Business Radio Network has the high hand. Next July the network will celebrate its third anniversary, and as it gears up for its fourth broadcast year, indications are that BRN is here to stay.

BRN President and Chief Executive Officer Lou Millini credits the network's aggressive affiliation policy for the company's continued expansion. "We knew that the winning combination was to get affiliates in as many of the top 100 markets as possible so that we could expand our services and attract advertisers." he said. At present, BRN has affiliates in nine of the top 10 markets. 17 of the top 20 and 40 of the top 50, Mellini said.

Also important: BRN's strategy for international expansion, which has been vital for the network's extensive coverage of the Gulf War. Mellini admitted he was skeptical when the company last year developed a business relationship with Saudi Arabia: "We thought with oil prices being down we wouldn't need a reporter over there, but thanks to that far-reaching thinking, and the fact that our people had the ability to make contacts, we have been able to carry out our vision of making BRN a national and international network."

BRN Executive Vice President Karen Faulkner said an overall marketing strategy she characterized as "being our own best competition" allowed the network to develop programing and services independent of what the other business networks were doing.

With 83 affiliates covering roughly two-thirds of U.S. markets, BRN provides a news/talk format that Chief Operating Officer Dave Rose said is "flexible enough that the local broadcaster to some extent can set his own local identity." This provides affiliates a variety of options to "either be identified as the news-talk-information station in the market, or if that station already exists, they can take a more narrow view and become known as the business news source." Rose said most affiliates carry BRN's business and financial news programing elements, as well as talk shows featuring personal finance investment advice. "All told, the average affiliate carries 60% of our programing, and 40% local programing," Rose said.

Mellini claimed that BRN exemplifies increasing advertiser interest in niche formatting. "Instead of taking the shotgun approach, advertisers are learning that if they match the right product with the right niche format they can rifle their message—and therefore improve their return on invested advertising dollars," he said. "Because advertisers can target our demo, we feel we're the electronic business magazine of the 21st century."

BRN's average listener is a 48-yearold male college grad with a household income of $70,000, Mellini said. "Our goal is to create an editorial environment that virtually guarantees an audience of people who are interested in a certain kind of product or service. Advertisers for our finance-oriented talk shows not only are going to get a group of consumers who are interested in the topic of personal investing."

personal investing." What's ahead? "Our three greatest challenges of this decade are to continue our international expansion, strengthen the bonds we have with our current affiliates and roll out new programs and services," Rose said.

RNA UNVEILS TARGETED MARKETING PLAN

The Radio Network Association in New York last Friday (March 1) initiated a marketing plan designed to raise awareness of nonnetwork advertisers to the cost-effectiveness of network radio.

RNA President Bud Heck said the plan, which uses extensive direct mail and one-on-one presentations over the next 12 months, is targeted to decisionmakers at an elite group of specific advertised brands, including travel, automotive, computers, insurance and packaged goods. "Many of these products or catagories have bypassed the medium for years," Heck said.

The initial strategy is to hit these decision-makers at least twice a month prior to TV's up-front season, which begins next April, Heck said. "We're going to position the medium on two fronts: as a primary medium and as a mix with TV." He said the intent is to take advantage of the decline of the network TV audience and the lack of loyalty of that dwindling audience. "The TV viewers are disappearing, and the advertiser today really doesn't know where to look," Heck said. "Additionally, those who do watch TV often have no idea what they're going to watch tonight—but they know their favorite radio stations."

Heck said loyalty is "the single most important factor that an advertiser should look for. He added that "94% of every product and service in this country is purchased by a radio listener. This medium has that kind of in-depth penetration, and these are the concepts we want these people to understand and accept."

INTERNATIONAL

'DIVERSIFICATION, NOT UNIFORMITY' KEY TO SUCCESSFUL INTERNATIONAL TV

That's opinion of MTV's Tom Freston, who says that apart from war coverage, there's nothing that can command worldwide audiences ith CNN's worldwide coverage of the Persian Gulf war as a backdrop, Tom Freston, chairman and chief executive officer, MTV Networks, spoke of the globalization of television and told a Los Angeles luncheon crowd that the growing international television marketplace holds both "tremendous potential" and warning signals for American television suppliers. Speaking before a crowd of more than 500 at a luncheon sponsored by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences in Los Angeles, Freston said the recent breakdown of General Agreement On Tariffs and Trade (GATT) talks may bring about a system in which individual or groups of countries might establish their own rules regarding the importing and exporting of programing.

Drawing from Marshall McLuhan's view of a "global village," Freston said that while CNN's coverage of the war has shown that "the television industry can provide simultaneous worldwide programing on a sustained basis.... Truly global television works only when you have a topic of truly global interest. And while there is nothing more serious than war, no topic that is less serious can command that kind of attention."

Freston said CNN's success in providing global coverage of the Persian Gulf war has masked the potential dangers faced by domestic program suppliers in a changing international marketplace. "CNN's global success in covering a shooting war may blind us to the global dangers producers may face in a nonshooting war in the years ahead...namely, the very real possibility of a trade war that could victimize television producers and other exporters of American culture," he said.

The most recent round of GATT talks, called the Uruguay Round, broke down in December and were significant because the organization, for the first time in its 40-year history, began considering services as an import-export item, a category under which television programing would fall. Freston said if GATT is unable to come to a general agreement on the trade of services, U.S. program suppliers may in the future face strict quotas from individual countries or blocks of countries. "Already, the nations of the European Common Market have issued a directive saying that, in the future, European broadcasters should reserve a majority proportion of their transmission time to programing of European origin," he said.

With those dangers in mind, Freston said MTV Networks' main strategy is "think globally, act locally. It means not only thinking of the entire globe as our market, but also in developing programing that is global in its universal appeal, but local in expressing that appeal to different cultures."

He used the launch of MTV Europe three years ago as an example of their approach. "Though rock 'n' roll may be a universal language, it is one with many different dialects. While youth everywhere...have the same enthusiasm for Madonna, Michael Jackson, Phil Collins and the other so-called international superstars, they also root for the home team. They support artists who reflect their own distinct cultural heritage. These considerations certainly shaped our thinking...when we made our first major move outside the U.S. market with the launch of MTV Europe.

Our most basic strategic decision was that this joint venture with the United Kingdom's Maxwell Entertainment Group should live up to its name, that is, that it should be a truly European version of MTV."

He said the company uses the same philosophy in programing Nickelodeon. "We find many similarities of interest among children on a global basis with regard to what they want to see on television."

As a result of the globalization of television, Freston said many countries are adopting a protectionist standpoint, and restrictions could become worse as governments fear the loss of their individual cultures under a barrage of U.S. programing. "With more choice there are more opportunities for producers and more chances for people around the world to better understand each other. The world does become smaller, but it won't become homogenous," he said. -st n a blow to European satellite sports service Eurosport, the European Commission has ruled the channel is anticompetitive. The commission took up the issue after sports channel rival Screensport complained that the joint venture channel between members of the European Broadcasting Union and Rupert Murdoch's Sky Television unfairly tied up European TV rights to sports coverage produced by EBU members.

The commission agreed the effect of the channel was "to limit and distort free competition...[bringing] together two potential competitors for sports programs so they cooperated instead of competing, while at the same time denying access to programs for other satellite or cable services." The decision follows Murdoch's decision to sell his 50% stake in Eurosport in favor of the more United Kingdom-centered sports channel of former direct broadcast satellite rival British Satellite Broadcasting, which merged with Sky TV late last year.

FRED SEEGAL AND THE ART OF THE MEDIA DEAL

he cover story last month for a major financial publication quotes Salomon Brothers Chairman John Gutfreund as saying he has a special interest in people who are very smart. Knowing that, it is no surprise the New York-based investment banking firm last spring hired Fred Seegal away from Lehman Brothers to become co-head of corporate finance. Clients and financial professionals who know Seegal regularly describe the 43-year-old investment banker as "very smart" or "brilliant."

Seegal continues to work with media and entertainment companies, which he has done now for over fifteen years, despite his wider responsibilities at Salomon, which he said involve helping "make sure that away from media and entertainment, we are calling on the right people with the right products." He is currently involved in finding capital for Orion Pictures and recently helped complete the restructuring of Jacor Communications and the CBS stock buyback.

Seegal said he was forced to specialize when he became a partner in 1982: "I was told you had better figure out what you want to do rather than just work on other people's deals." He might have worked with retailing, in which his father and other family members were active, or insurance, but Lehman already had "pretty good leadership there, so I staked out media and communications, which has worked out much better than I ever would have imagined."

In this case the force of circumstance did not totally depart from earlier interests. Seegal was sports editor of the newspaper in high school: a disk jockey for the Cornell University radio station, and editor of the Law school year book. After starting law school. Seegal expanded his studies to a joint law/business degree, which Harvard packed into a four-year program.

Seegal started his career working for Lehman Brothers partner Peter Solomon, who said, "working with Fred was a semi-hysterical event. He has high energy and enthusiasm, is a wonderful source of ideas and is a real intellectual and emotional challenge."

The firm was retained by railroad company CSX Corp. to sell its Jacksonville, Fla., newspaper, which, said Seegal, became one of the first media properties to be sold by auction. The highest bidder, Billy Morris. flew to the Lehman Brother offices in New York to hand over his sealed bid personally at the last minute. Said Seegal, "He later told me it was the first time he ever had a chance to participate on a level playing field. For me it was my first exposure to how important the entrepreneurial spirit is in the media business. It wasn't just his (Morris's) job...it was his life.

Soon after the newspaper auction, Seegal and Lehman represented H&C Communications in its succesful bid to buy two TV stations from Cowles Communications. H&C President James Crowther said of Seegal, "He was well prepared and extraordinarily good at determining the value of that property."

One of the losers in the Cowles TV station bidding, Burnham Broadcasting, later met with Seegal. Said Burnham chairman, Peter Desnoes. "Fred said 'let me put it simply: you hired a competing firm and lost. If you want to win, hire me.' "Seegal arranged for Lehman parent company American Express to financially guarantee the next bid of Burnham, still a small single-station owner, which helped the company win.

Among the media group's early tasks was "the missionary work" of explaining media cash flow, rather than earnings. to institutional investors. That education helped several years later when Lehman was able to syndicate securities to those investors for such broadcasters as American Television & Communications. Malrite, Infinity and Jacor.

Still later were larger merger transactions, including that between Time and Warner, which involved the firm and Seegal for more than a year. The current challenges for Seegal include helping some companies restructure, while encouraging others to take advantage of > the current equity market to improve their balance sheets.

> Media and entertainment companies he said have changed over the last 10 to 15 years as entrepreneurs have had to adapt, with varying degrees of success, from growing companies to operating them. Overall, he said, management is better now: "It has had to be, there are no more lay-up businesses as TV broadcasting might have been 15 years ago."

Seegal has served as a director of pay-TV operator Spectradyne—in which the firm had an equity investment—but generally he does not get directly involved in his clients' businesses. In fact, said Seegal, it is a "warning signal when they (clients) start asking your opinion about how they should be doing things."

Friends say that the pressure of investment banking, combined with Seegal's acumen, has forced on him a short attention span and occasional impatience. But said a friend, his marriage and a daughter have "softened him substantially."

ABC 0&0's in top three markets maintuined in both Arbitron and Nielsen February metered market sweeps races-dominant market position, signon to sign-off. In New York, WABC-TV, buoyed by winning ratings for 5, 6 and 11 p.m. local newscasts, remained atop station race with 8.4 rating/20 share (NSI), WNBC-TV dropped to third-place with 5.6/16, while WCBS-TV took advantage by finishing with 6.0/14, 7% increase over year ago. Fox O&O WNYWremained TV New York, top independent with 4.6/11, 11% rating increase, WPIX-TV followed with 4.1/10 (+17%) and wwoR-Tv with 3.8/9 (+11%). In Los Angeles, complete Arbitron numbers had KABC-TV dropping 2% from February 1990 with 6/15, followed by KNBC-TV (5.3/14, -7%) and KCBS-TV (4.4/11, +5%). KTLA-TV emerged as top independent in L.A. with 3.5/9 (ARB), but experienced 10% ratings drop against year-ago numbers. KTTV-TV (3.3/8), KCAL-TV (2.9/7) and KCOP-TV (2.8/7) filled out Monday-Friday indie race. Across-board wins for wLS-TV Chicago's 4, 5, 6 and 10 p.m. CT newscasts also helped ABC O&O maintain commanding 10.2/24 (NSI) lead over WMAQ-TV (6.4/15) and WBBM-TV (5.5/13), Among independents, WGN-

TV was tops with 5.2/12, while WFLD-TV inched closer (growing 7%) with 3.2/8 and WPWR-TV remained flat with 2.4/6.

Broadcast station sales last week totaled $59.341 million, tripling average of $20,197 million for first eight weeks of 1991. Increase was due largely to sales of AM-FM combos in Dallas-Fort Worth, Phoenix and Richmond, Va., markets (including FM standalone) totaling $49 million. Seventeen stations traded hands, up from weekly average of 14 for year. According to Jim Blackburn of Blackburn & Co., which brokered sale of two of week's combos, it was example of deals "struggling through to the daylight" and not in anticipation of government relaxing bank restrictions, since terms of deals had already been in place for weeks. However, "it is a crack in the dam," said Blackburn, "and the dam is beginning to break, and when people see this, more people with deep pockets will come out and say: 'alright, values have bottomed out, the other guy did it, I'll consider buying now too.'

TAGLIABUE'S PPV REMARKS CONCERN MARKEY

N FL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue's comments on ESPN, and later in the New York Times, concerning the NFL experimenting with pay per view by the end of its present TV contracts, have drawn the wary eye of Representative Edward Markey (D-Mass.), chairman of the House Telecommunications Subcommittee.

Markey wrote Tagliabue last week, saying: "I am deeply troubled by your statements and ask that you promptly reconsider any plans the NFL may have to charge people on a per-game basis to view televised professional football."

Markey said Tagliabue's comments are "surprising" in light of his testimony to the subcommittee on May 9, 1990. At that time, Tagliabue said there would be no changes in televised carriage that would jeopardize "long-term fan support." Markey said working-class and low-income families would be harmed if per-game charges reached estimates of $15 to $20. Additionally, he pointed out that PPV games would not be available to more than 80% of the audience.

Markey asked Tagliabue for a "written representation of the NFL's position concering NFL games on a pay-per-view basis," and indicated the matter may require further hearings or legislation.

The NFL announced last week that Neil Austrian, one time chairman of Showtime, will become president and chief operating offier of the league. In the newly created post, he will assist in developing the NFL's TV plans, including the use of PPV. Chapter 11 bankruptcy. Restructuring talks between company and creditors holding over $1 billion of notes and secured loans have been taking place for more than half year. Plans to pay off some of debt from proceeds of sale of WMAR-TV Baltimore fell through several weeks ago when proposed purchaser Scripps-Howard backed away from deal; lawsuit seeking to require Scripps-Howard to proceed with purchase has been filed by GH1.

In first major change since he rejoined CBS last October, Peter Lund, executive VP, CBS/Broadcast Group and president, CBS Marketing, named Joseph Abruzzese, senior VP, CBS Television Network sales. Abruzzese was previously VP, daytime, children's and late night sales. Jerome Dominus, senior VP, entertainment marketing and sales, was named senior VP, sales and media development. Dominus will develop multimedia opportunities between CBS network, CBS owned TV stations and CBS radio. All executives at CBS Sales will now report to Abruzzese. Both Abruzzese and Dominus will continue to report to Lund.

House cable reregulation bill may soon emerge. Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Ed Markey (D-Mass.) promised to introduce measure once Gulf War was no longer major distraction for Congress. Moreover, Markey has scheduled hearing on subject for March 20. Another sign bill is on way.

Further confirmation that credit easing will be encouraged by administration (BROADCASTING, Dec. 31, 1990) was provided in testimony last week by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady before Senate Budget Committee. Brady said that within week new rules would be announced, including those affecting highly-leveraged transactions (HLT's) whose criteria characterize most media loans (BROADCASTING, June 4, 1990). Sources within industry and elsewhere believe changes are most likely to appear in rules for delisting loans from HLT status.

NBC's 1992 pay-per-view Olympics last week announced carriage agreements with 18 MSO's, though no top-10 cable operators. Operators are not being asked to give any financial guarantees, but will get 30%-63% of revenue based on performance. Early sign-ons (before June 30) get 2% more revenue, and those who do expected local marketing get additional 5%. Rest of revenue variable depends on buy rate MSO achieves, and is based on how many addressable house-holds cable operator has. For example, operator with 9% buy rate out of 52% addressable households would get to keep 44% of revenue.

The National Press Foundation presented ABC News President Roone Arledge its Sol Taishoff Award, its annual recognition of broadcast journalism excellence named for BROADCASTING's founder. ABC's David Brinkley (r), last year's Taishoff Award winner, accepted the trophy for Arledge from NPR Vice Chairman Gerald E. Udwin (l) during last Thursday night's (Feb. 28) dinner and ceremonies in Washington. Arledge was unable to attend due to breaking events in the Persian Gulf War.

NBC, ABC AFFILIATES MEET WITH NETWORKS

N BC last week held its mid-season affiliate meeting in Washington to discuss regulatory and business matters. Reports of continuing budget cuts at the network did not receive much attention, said Eric Bremner, president of King Broadcasting and chairman of the NBC affiliate board: "Everybody was aware that big expense reduction had been in place at all three networks, so it wasn't a big surprise."

NBC President Bob Wright said the proposed cuts are in response to a slow advertising market and the "unprecedented" costs associated with covering the Gulf War. Wright told BROADCASTING he did not consider reducing the network's $2.6 billion budget by $50 million to be a serious move.

Also last week, ABC televised a two-hour closed-circuit presentation to all its affiliates following a meeting of top network executives and members of the affiliate board. Among the programing issues discussed were daytime, where Dennis Swanson, President ABC sports, daytime and children's programing, said the 11 a.m.-1 p.m. time period was under active review. Swanson reportedly called ABC's Home Show a "disaster" and said another daytime show, Loving, lost the network money. Concerning late night, network executives said they understood affiliate concerns about obtaining programing more compatible with Nightline, although they also noted recent improvements in Into the Night with Rick Dees. George Newi, senior vice president, affiliate relations, said the network has achieved 92% clearance for World League of American Football telecasts, which begin in two weeks. ABC has told stations they cannot preempt other ABC programing to make room for the game telecasts, which will begin at 1 p.m. ET. That time period currently is used by a number of stations in the central times zones to air This Week with David Brinkley or Business World on a delayed basis. Such stations, including KSAT-TV San Antonio, Tex., and WBRC-TV Birmingham, Ala., said it will be difficult for them to find another place for the news shows because earlier in the day they carry religious and other local programing. Said James Schiavone, KSAT-TV general manager: "Because of the news nature of the programing, we can't delay Brinkley until late in the day." Conversations with those stations, also including KMOX-TV St. Louis, are continuing.

schedule on Sunday, March 31, in the 9:30-10 slot. Show has Married as its lead-in and replaces Good Grief, which was canceled. Series stars Joseph Bologna and Matt LeBlanc as father and son looking to get rich quick.

NBC's Shannon's Deal returns to schedule on Saturday, March 23, at 10-11 p.m. in special preview telecast. Series has been given seven-episode order, and network will announce regular time slot for show in next two weeks. One of seven episodes is two-hour special that had been scheduled to air on Sunday, March 17, but now will air later.

House Taxation and Revenue Committee of New Mexico state legislature tabled measure last week that would have imposed 5% tax on national television advertising in state. No other ad tax bills are pending in that legislature.

United Artists Entertainment Chief Executive Stewart Blair announced formation of $60 million-plus British cable TV program venture in London last week, heightening anticipation of deal in works for months and potentially involving UAE, USWest, Concast and others active in building British cable systems. Sources say plan has yet to be made formal, but according to Blair, funds would go toward development of cable channels for budding UK industry, including one called UK Today, mixed sports and entertainment channel with slot for cable operaters to place regional programing, and second called Classic TV, mix of cult TV programing similar in concept to Viacom's Nick at Night.

Late Friday (March 1), Financial News Network filed petition for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 in southern district of New York. Earlier in week, asset sale of FNN to CNBC was announced (see page 30).

Seattle-based radio format distributor, Broadcast Programing, has acquired Albuquerque-based radio format distributor, Drake-Chenault Enterprises. Expanded company will serve 850 stations.

NBC operating income dropped 21% in 1990, to $477 million, on 5% revenue decline, to $3,326,000,000, according to parent company General Electric.

ONE-SIDED VICTORY

Ithough the war is over, the questions about war coverage and government censorship remain. Is it their "patriotic duty" for the press corps to parrot the government line on the conduct of a war? Is it in the best interests of the country for their news media to to be manipulated for military purposes? Our answer is no. The press's "patriotic duty" is to report as accurately and responsibly as possible, to get into tight spots and ask tough questions. To herd them into pools and dole out the "news" is to do a disservice to them and the country.

As Ted Koppel pointed out in an interview with BROAD-CASTING (Feb. 25), pools deprive journalists of their driving force: competition. They can also produce the irony of a reporter scooping himself, said Koppel: "Let's say you've got an NBC reporter out there. He comes back at one in the afternoon, East Coast time; whatever he gives to the pool is shown on CNN for five-and-a-half hours. It's not until 6:30 that it shows up on Brokaw's show. You've got the ludicrous situation where you're going to be beaten by your own reporter." Some journalists have found ways to circumvent the pools, and some, Like CBS's Bob Simon and his crew. have paid a price for it.

There is a difference between information that clearly needs to remain classified, such as specific troop strengths or movements, and information that might simply reflect negatively on a nation's conduct of a war. To the extent the government tries to pass the second off as the first is the extent to which it must be taken to task. Banning coverage of coffins returning to Dover, Del., was not an attempt to protect classified information, but to insulate the government from criticism and the war from its real cost. That may be the military's objective, but it will never be the press's.

As RTNDA President David Bartlett points out: "All politicians try to manipulate the media. No military leader likes to be second-guessed by reporters. But news blackouts are an insult to the patriotism of the American press and to the intelligence of the American people. Americans are entitled to more than just the military's side of the story." To fail to protest unnecessary secrecy, said Bartlett, would be to "sacrifice a large part of the very freedom we were fighting for in the first place."

The government's desire for a one-sided victory in the Persian Gulf War is to be applauded. Its desire for a one-sided view of it is not.

EARLY NEWS

hen former broadcaster Ron Erickson came to Lakeridge High in Oswego, Ore., where he is adviser to the Radio-TV Club, his goal was to "provide quality studios for broadcast vocational education." The dilemma he faced was that there was—and is—no money in the school system to fund such a program. Nevertheless, Lakeridge students are currently operating a cable FM station over the Columbia Cable TV system there (and in negotiation for carriage by area TCI and Paragon systems), on which they sell time to help cover expenses. They too are a few pieces of equipment shy of producing a schoolwide closed-circuit TV newscast during lunch break. The story of how they got this far hinges on the generosity of many in the broadcast and cable industry.

Erickson put out a call to friends and acquaintances for donations to the program. The response, he says, was "incredible." From KGW-TV Portland came monitors, switchers, racks and more-including the volunteered technical expertise of former chief engineer, Jess Ortega; from KOMO-TV came a film chain (Chief Engineer Jack Barnes rented a truck and delivered the equipment himself); from California-based cable equipment supplier, Catel Corp., came cable modulation equipment for both the FM and TV; from Prime Image, also of California, came two new time-base correctors and a switcher; from Tektronics, Beaverton, Ore., a waveform monitor/vector scope; from KATU-TV Portland, a news set. The list of benefactors does not end there, but suffice it to say Lakeridge's need was met by an industry eager to pitch in. All totalled, Erickson estimates, a half million dollars worth of equipment has been donated, with more on the way. Not too shabby (Oh, the school system did pitch in $100 dollars to pay for cabinets to hold the radio gear.)

There are several points to this story. The first is that it is a shame the school system cannot fund a radio-TV vocational program. "If this were offered as a class," says Erickson, "we could easily fill two periods." The second is that the Fifth Estate has shown both generosity and foresight; clearly the industry has a vested interest in encouraging motivated students to get early hands-on experience.

And finally, according to Erickson, he lacks only studio lights and cameras to put on some action news at the noon lunch break. If there is a station or system with spares of either on its hands, there is a club in Oswego ready to foster its own Ed Murrows—or Bernard Shaws.

SOME TRUCKING COMPANIES WANT THEM. DO YOU?

Double and triple trailer trucks, almost half a football field long and weighing more than 41 automobiles.

The trucking companies that want them are trying very hard to persuade Congress to clear the way for them to run everywhere.

If these trucking companies have their way, there will be a lot more of these trucks on the highways and a lot more traffic. That means more accidents, more fuel consumption, more congestion, more pollution and more damage to the roads.

If you don't want these bigger trucks, you can stop them.
