COUNTRY HICKS OR DIGITALLY

WHERE DO COUNTRY MUSIC and radio fit into the high-tech, digital world?

Conventional wisdom holds that country music fans are slow adopters of technology, not active in the digital realm and perhaps even technologically challenged.

But are they?

Surprisingly, the answer may be yes.

When Billboard Radio Monitor asked broadcasters how country fans view or use such things as Internet streaming stations, high-definition side channels, downloading music and file sharing, the results were mixed. But many of the broadcasters polled say their "soccer mom" audience just does not have time to care about such things.

Beyond the anecdotal, there is some hard evidence to support this.

In Edison Media Research's 2005 study "Internet & Multimedia," the findings indicate that "country radio format PIs are less tech-savvy than the rest of the population . . . in just about everything except for digital TV subscriptions," according to Edison VP Jason Hollins, who thinks the digital TV factor may "have something to do with living in more rural areas."

"Overall Internet usage, PC ownership, broadband usage, Internet radio listening, Internet video viewing, iPod/MP3 player ownership [and] satellite radio interest all index somewhat to significantly lower than the overall population," Hollins says.

Mark Lindow, PD of Keymarket Communications WOG1 (Froggy 98) Pittsburgh, has found this to be very true of his audience.

When he is on the air and at live events, Lindow says he frequently asks callers about their digital music habits. What he has found is that "they either don't know how to download or don't want to be bothered and prefer having the CD."

"I particularly remember talking to a listener who called me asking about a newer song Froggy was playing," Lindow recalls. "It was the lead single from a forthcoming CD, due out in a month or two. She loved the song [and] wanted to buy it now. So I suggested downloading from iTunes [so] she could have it in a few minutes, and for only 99 cents. The reaction was a clear: 'No, I'll wait for the CD to come out.'"

A few months ago, Lindow tried another experiment.

"Out of curiosity, I had the Froggy airstaff ask callers—no matter what they were calling in about—if they downloaded music," he says. "Among all those callers they talked to, it was unanimous. No one was downloading.

"My opinion, based on the listeners I've talked with, is that most of the listeners are not downloading songs, and are buying CDs," Lindow says.

He expresses surprise that "more people aren't using services like iTunes, as it's cheap and relatively easy to do. Certainly every day more and more people are getting comfortable with and learning how to download songs and burn them to CD. So this is all changing as we speak."

Susquehanna Radio senior VP/GM Dan Halyburton thinks there is a perfectly good reason why country listeners may not be as up to speed on technology as listeners of other formats.

"The thing about country formats is that they have always been so family-oriented," he says. "So many of our listeners have children and really busy lives. That's what always slowed our adoption rates down. It's not like we have an audience that isn't educated or lacks money. They have other priorities in their lives, and some of the newer technologies, especially in the audio realm, weren't the first on their lists."

Halyburton says that is especially true when listeners have to choose between "an MP3 player or new tennis shoes for everyone."

And Halyburton thinks another factor may be in play. Country radio listeners, he theorizes, are more satisfied by what they are getting from the radio than fans of some other formats.

"Country radio has and continues to do a very good job of mirroring the musical tastes of its audience," he says. "It's been such an inclusive format, so if you are a country fan you are not really being left out" and having to find music through other methods. "It's not a format that broke down into tight little genres," he says of country. "It's always been kind of nicely homogenized.

"With all that going on it's not surprising that folks say, 'Why do I need all this other stuff?'"

Mark Lindow

'IT'S 2005, WE ARE NOT THE BUCOLIC
HICKS AND HAYSEEDS THAT SOME THINK.'
—KEITH HILL

But even Halyburton's home base station, KPLX (the Wolf) Dallas, has plenty of people listening to its streaming audio. In fact, he says the Wolf has his company's second-largest streaming audience after KFOG San Francisco.

At the Wolf, he says, the jocks give away iPods on the air and "talk about streaming and send people to the Web . . . The Wolf does huge [streaming] hours, so there is no lack of usage of that."

'BUCOLIC HICKS AND HAYSEEDS'

Not everyone agrees that the country audience is behind the curve when it comes to technology.

"It's 2005, we are not the bucolic hicks and hayseeds that some think," consultant Keith Hill says. "Country folks do use computers, have e-mail addresses and are buying iPods and HDTV."

"If our Web hits are any indication, country listeners are very tech-savvy," says Sam Thompson, OM for Premiere Radio Networks' syndicated show "After MidNite With Blair Garner."

"We're not only getting tons of hits on our Web site, but we're getting tons of listeners sampling new music on our site every week," Thompson says. "We've also had great experiences with posting exclusive audio, such as interviews, on our site. If the content is compelling, listeners/consumers will respond to it."

Hill was among those who recently helped launch Capitol Broadcasting's WCMC (Genuine Country) Raleigh, N.C., which provided him with some information about just how Web-savvy country listeners may be.

"We launched with our signal not completely optimized," he says. "In less than 90 days we will double our antenna height. Until then we have made streaming audio available via the Web. We have had hundreds of e-mails saying they are tuning us in on the Web in outlying areas and in buildings where radio signals are impeded."

Jaye Albright of Albright & O'Malley Country Consulting says, "Streaming is becoming more and more important, even for upper-demo listeners who you might think would not be listening to a country radio stream."

She cites an example from a Canadian client station. "PD Willie Cole at CKRM Regina [Saskatchewan] reports that during the [Canadian Broadcasting Corp.] strike earlier this fall that numbers of people listening to 620ckrm.com for the hockey and CFL games has been huge. Now, as a result of that new cume discovering that CKRM streams, they are seeing streaming stats during the workday for this AM country station at impressive average-quarter-hour levels."

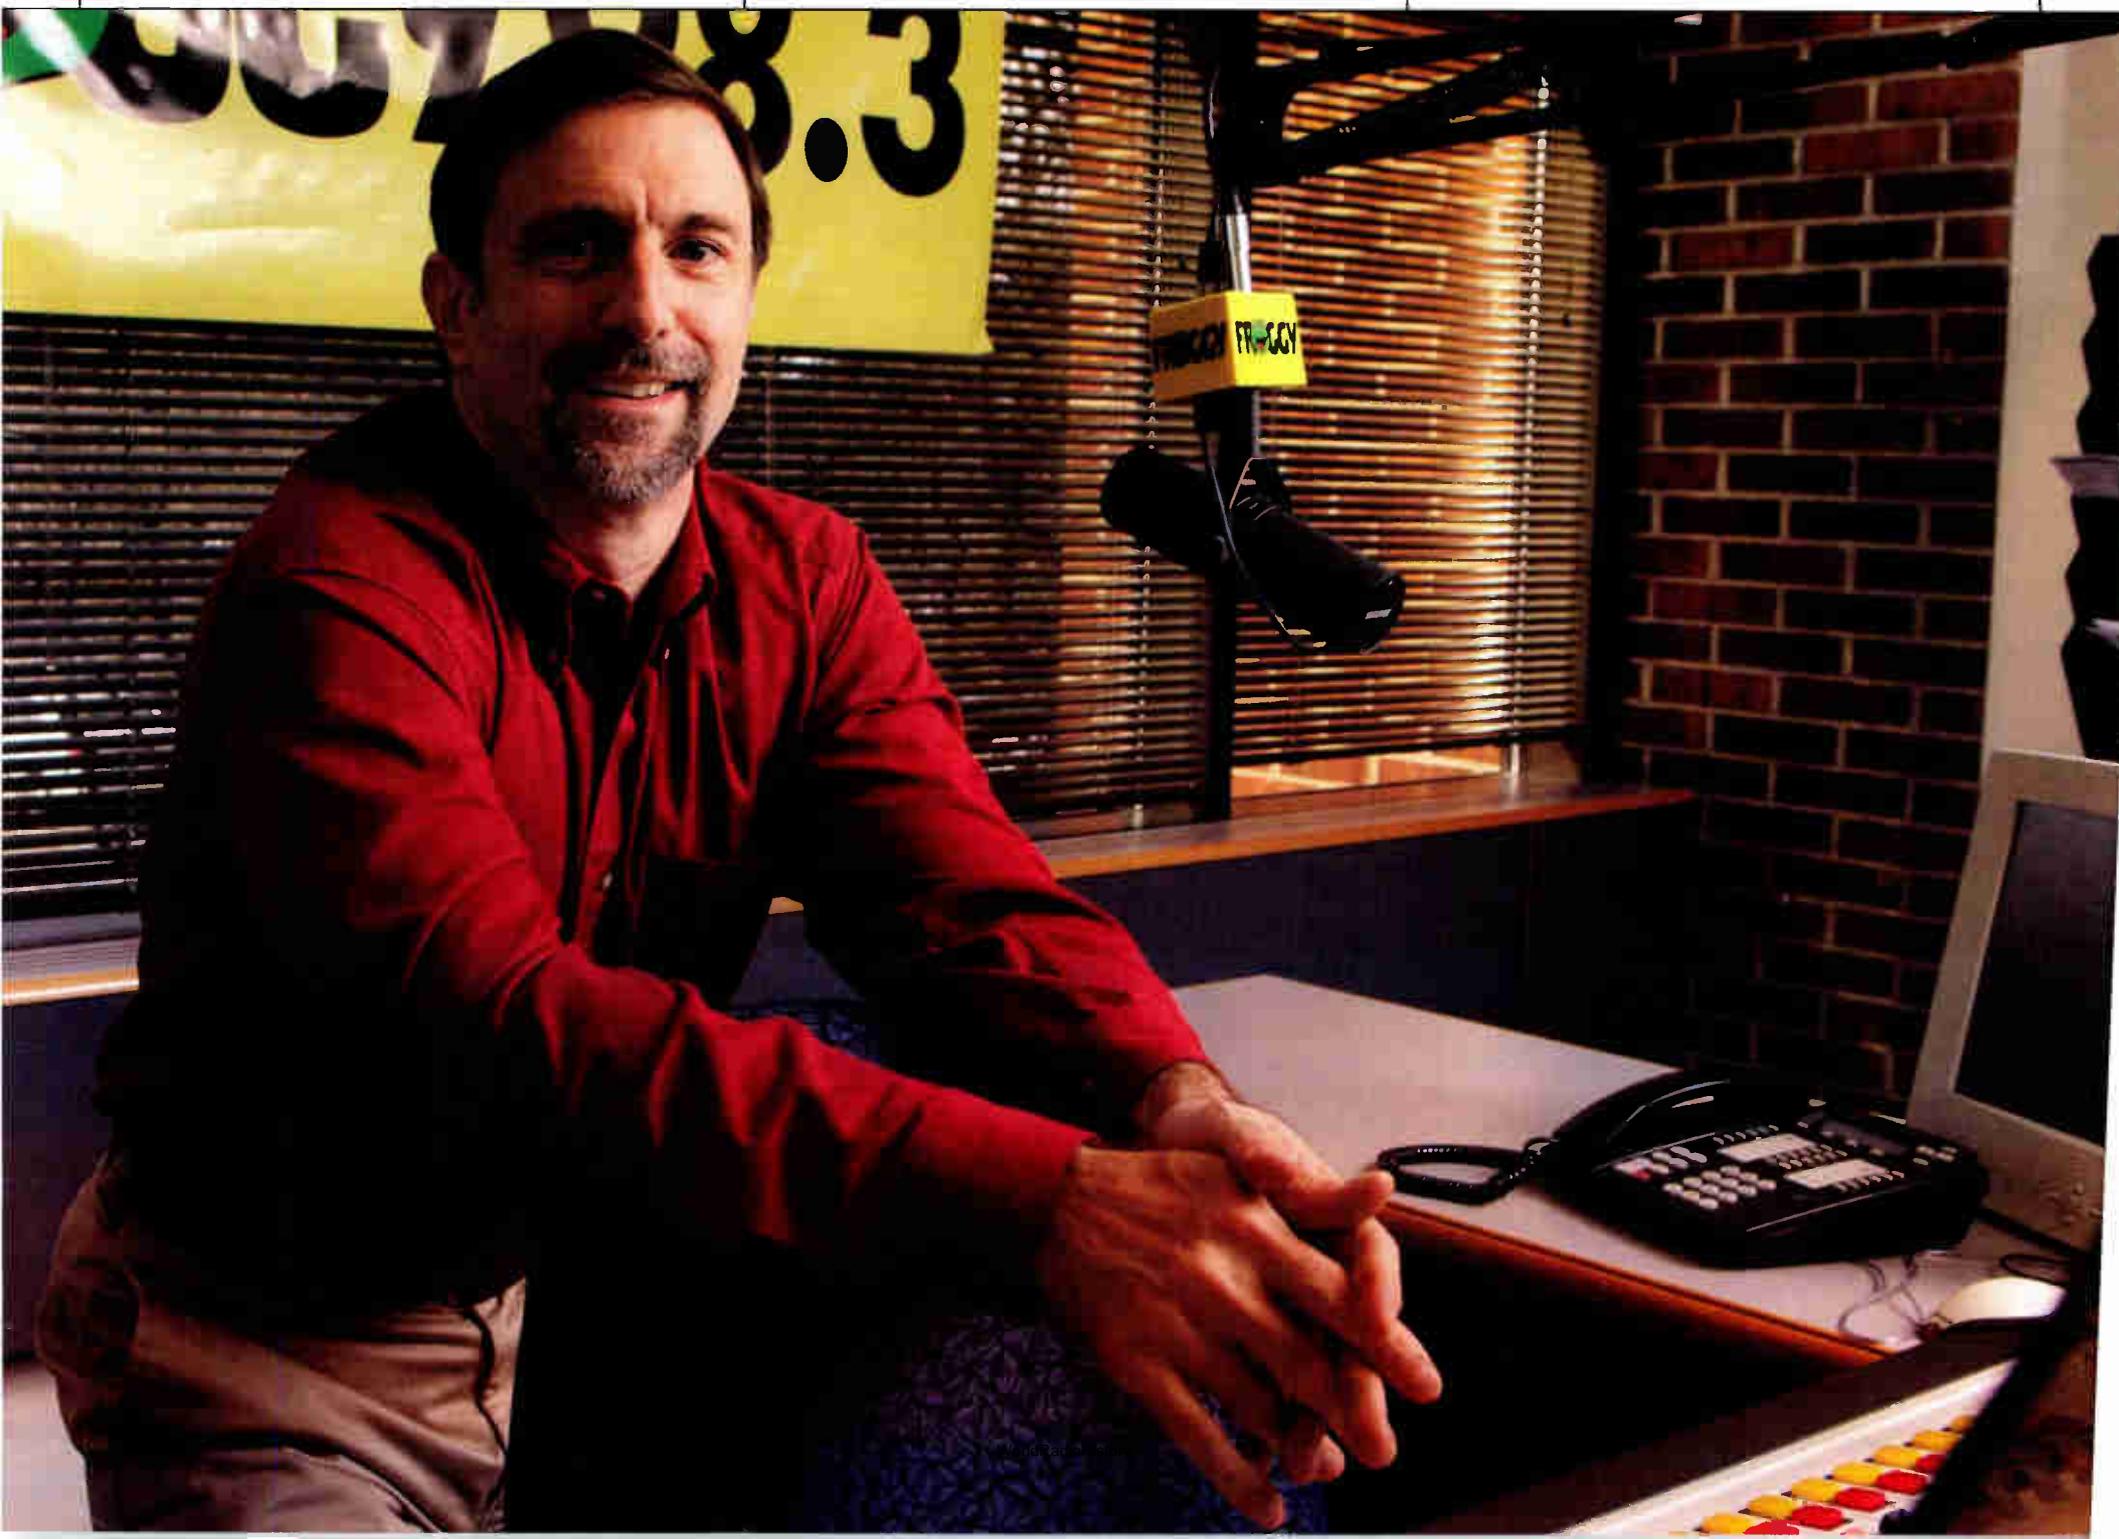

As for iPods and podcasting, Albright says they have "added fresh buzz to the arena of downloading. In recent research in several client markets, we're seeing more than one in five country radio listeners reporting that their home has at least one iPod. One in four reports they want one for Christmas."

CATCHING UP QUICKLY

So, even if country fans are still a bit behind the curve when it comes to adoption of new technologies, Hill and Edison VP of music and programming Sean Ross think they will likely catch up soon enough.

"The country audience is not what it was five years ago when country listeners were less tech-savvy than, say, rock listeners," Ross says. "Even if country stations aren't targeting 18- to 24-year-olds any more than they were in 1992, there are more of them listening because of the available product. So even if the existing audience didn't develop more interest in the digital music world, chances are that listeners who are already tech-savvy are finding the format."

Hill adds, "It's too early to tell completely, but country listeners are likely to have similar behaviors to all other formats, given time." ● ● ●

RADIO

CAN YOU HEAR

IT HAS BEEN A HOT TOPIC for a year or two, but radio and music on cell phones is closer than you might think. In fact, if you look over your shoulder, it is already here, presenting yet another entertainment option to consumers.

"This is really designed to be somewhat of a replacement for FM in the way that we know it," Motorola director of product marketing Dave Ulmer says of his company's iRadio service, which will debut in first-quarter 2006. "It's allowing the consumers to be put in charge of what to listen to, when and where."

Verizon, Cingular, T-Mobile, Nextel and Sprint customers use Motorola phones.

Once launched, iRadio will provide subscribers willing to pay $7-$10 per month with hundreds of commercial-free channels that can be downloaded onto their cell phones. While it sounds similar to podcasting, there is a difference. iRadio content is perishable, meaning that once it is heard it is gone—the listener cannot burn it, e-mail it or pass it on, according to the company.

connection to that fan," Ulmer says. "There is a direct interactive loop because there's a phone in the middle. If somebody's listening to one of those channels and hears something that they like, whether it's a new single or information on an upcoming concert . . . they can hit a button on their phone—or if they're in their car on their car stereo—and it will add that information directly into their 'wish list,' and they can access that information on their PC when they get home."

If you want to buy an artist's album, there might be a link to amazon.com waiting on your home computer. Looking for concert tickets? Then you will be directed to Ticketmaster or tickets.com, for example. "The links that are necessary to fulfill whatever transaction's involved will be on their PC," Ulmer says. "We send the consumer straight to the page where they can buy it themselves."

And the service will not only expose major-label artists. Through its Get Heard Network (getheardnetwork.com), the company is soliciting music from independent artists. "Like you, iRadio defines definition," one promo boasts.

ignore the evolution that's taking place, and I think there's a place for all of it. There's a place for traditional AM/FM, there's a place for satellite and there's a place for mobile radio.

"We have already signed some deals that we have not announced," he says, "and there are more coming with brand-name programs on the talk side and major broadcasters that are looking for a way to expand into the mobile space."

While he says it is clear consumers do not want to hear blocks of ads when they are listening to music or talking on their cell phones, Ulmer says there may be a happy medium. "We're still looking at that and what makes sense," he says. "There's a difference between overpopulating the station with commercials and having a sponsorship or some type of targeted promotion."

"A bass fishing channel, for example, might be sponsored by Bass Pro Shops," he says. Merchandise sales, newsletters, subscriptions and similar premium offerings are other potential ways that advertisers can be branded without 60-second commercials, Ulmer says.

The rollout for iRadio is well under way with consumer trials

'FROM THIS POINT FORWARD, I THINK YOU'RE GOING TO SEE . . . AN AVALANCHE OF PHONES THAT ARE NOT JUST MUSIC-CAPABLE, BUT MUSIC-OPTIMIZED.' —DAVE ULMER

Motorola's service fills a void, according to Ulmer. "There are a whole lot of people that have been abandoned by radio as we know it," he says. As an example, he cites the loss of classic rock stations, as well as "some of the more obscure content that people do like to listen to but just can't find on typical radio."

"We found as we were looking at this that there's a whole lot of radio that people do want to listen to, and most of it's stuck in their living room on their computer," he adds.

While webcasts and satellite radio fill some of the content gap, Ulmer says that those options do not address the rest of the problem: mobility. "Everyone I know has a cell phone," he says. It is about "content that you want, where you want, when you want it."

iRadio will go beyond filling the void of a particular genre, Ulmer says, by allowing consumers to listen to channels fashioned around their favorite artists. As the result of a recent deal cut with Universal Music Group, iRadio will feature a number of country music channels dedicated solely to such artists as George Strait, Shania Twain, Reba McEntire, Vince Gill, Trisha Yearwood and Lee Ann Womack.

Are you a die-hard Womack fan? Or perhaps you are just discovering her because of her recent wins at this year's Country Music Assn. Awards? Add her channel to your cell phone. "We have a license with Universal," Ulmer says, noting that Motorola hopes to have similar deals in place with all the majors. "We can now create specific radio channels that are dedicated to their artists and include much, much more than simply music."

For the most part, iRadio will not have DJs or commercials, although, Ulmer says, "we are finding that some of the channels that are being created are lending themselves to having some form of conversation between the tracks."

An artist's channel might include tour dates, album release dates, new singles and back catalog. "A whole selection of stuff that's very focused to their specific fan and gives them a direct

What consumers will not have to worry about, according to Ulmer, is iRadio eating up their cellular minutes. "We have done this in a pretty clever combination of over-the-air delivery and loading from an Internet connection from your PC to your phone," Ulmer says. "The bulk of the music and talk shows that you're listening to have, in effect, been time-shifted from your computer onto your phone over a USB connection."

"Anything that is time-sensitive, the more hot content, is updated over the air, and that's a very, very small part of it," he adds. "It's done without interrupting your phone usage and without costing you additional minutes or data charges."

The other variable, of course, is battery usage, and Ulmer says current iRadio technology will not drain a cell phone's power. "Battery technology has come a long way and continues to advance," he says. "What we're doing is not draining your battery like you would if you were on a phone call for eight hours, so we're getting eight to 10 hours . . . of non-stop usage."

There are four things that cell phones need for consumers to utilize iRadio, Ulmer says. "Storage, Bluetooth, a headset jack and a reasonable amount of battery life." And many more phones with those features are just around the corner.

In fact, 2006 may be the turning point for radio availability on a number of cell phones, according to Ulmer. "From this point forward, I think you're going to see . . . an avalanche of phones that are not just music-capable, but music-optimized," he says.

Bluetooth is important because, unlike some other services, that feature allows the user to transmit iRadio to home stereos and car radios for expanded listening options.

Even though it is described as a "replacement for FM," broadcasters and other traditional content providers are lining up to be involved with iRadio. "I think you'd be surprised," Ulmer says. "Everyone in the traditional broadcast realm is looking for all sorts of new ways to broaden their business. It would be foolish to currently being conducted in three U.S. metropolitan areas. To date, Ulmer says more than 200 channels—50 of which are talk—are already in place with more on the way.

In addition to willing partners, lack of bandwidth constraints is key to iRadio's growth, according to Ulmer. In fact, he calls it "a pretty considerable differentiator between what we're doing and any other kind of offering. We have no bandwidth constraints whatsoever. The consumer can pick any channels they want to take with them from an amazing selection."

"It allows us to have 60 channels of weather or 83 channels of rock," he says. "It's only limited by our imagination or the partners we're dealing with as to what kind of selection we provide to the consumer."

HITTING THE MSPOT

While iRadio is on the horizon, a company called MSpot is already providing two separate services to Sprint users with more on the way. MSpot Radio signed on in April, and MSpot Music went live in August. Another offering, MSpot Sports, will be available soon and promises streams from two of the three top sports brands, plus some local sports coverage options.

MSpot Radio provides music plus talk channels with content from NPR, Sportings News Radio and MarketWatch, among others. MSpot Music has similar content, but as the name suggests, it focuses just on music. Music videos are also available on both services.

Currently part of Sprint's Vision package, for $5.95 per month each, MSpot has plans for expansion. "We're having active discussions with all the majors in the U.S.," company co-founder Daren Tsui says.

The genesis of MSpot came last year when Tsui and his business partner, who have been involved in wireless technology since 1999, found out that Sprint had multimedia phones that streamed video. "What about an audio service?" Tsui recalls asking the carrier. "Phones are an audio device, so they can do audio very, very well." He says they reminded the company that just as important is the fact that audio bandwidth requirements are about one-third of what it takes for a video service.

They were given the go-ahead, and by April the service was a reality.

For Tsui and his partner, the numbers are what made the deal doable. "Worldwide, there are 2 billion cell phone users," Tsui says, "and it's growing very quickly.

"Cell phone users will typically buy a brand-new phone every 18 months," Tsui says, "which means that within a year or two a big, big portion of [U.S.] subscribers will have phones that are capable of receiving multimedia services."

While Tsui recognizes that battery life "definitely is an issue," he thinks it is becoming less of one. "I have a Sanyo phone, and I can listen to our service continually for an hour-and-a-half. That's pretty good."

One big difference between MSpot and iRadio is that the former service involves streaming. A computer is not involved, and it works on many existing phones. "With some of the newer phones, there's nothing to download," Tsui says. "There's a player already on the phone. You just subscribe to the service. On the older phones you do have to download a player."

Currently, 30%-40% of Sprint subscribers can access the service, according to Tsui, who notes that prior to its merger with Nextel, Sprint had roughly 16 million subscribers.

Another difference is that while iRadio allows users to listen on their car radio or home stereo, MSpot subscribers can only listen on their phone, which fits the subscriber profile, according to Tsui. "The listening habits of our subscribers are very different" than a traditional radio listener, he says. "From our server logs we've noticed that people will come in for maybe 10-15 minutes at a time, and then they'll leave. Because of that user behavior, we actually have three different types of show format that we support.

"One is on-demand," he explains. "You can go to the exact story that you want or the exact music video that you want. If you're only going to come on for five or 10 minutes at a time, then you're going to want to go to the exact content that you want."

The service also has prerecorded shows that are 30 minutes to two hours long and run in a loop. You can still get the show you want, Tsui says, but you might tune in to the middle of the show.

The third option is a "live" stream, which involves a 15-second delay to encode the data.

MSpot's music programming is developed internally and externally. Commercial-free stations are programmed by the company, while it outsources others. "On the hip-hop side we have a show called 'Breakdown FM With Davey D,' and that's produced for us outside of the company," Tsui says. "It's very much of a radio-show format because not only do you have the songs, there's also artist interviews, transitions between songs and imaging." Another show called "Radioscope" is "very E!-like, but for music," he says.

Tsui is aware of Motorola's service, but says the two offerings are different. iRadio is more akin to the joint venture between Motorola and iTunes, which allows subscribers to listen to music on a ROKR model phone. "Our service is a little different," Tsui says. "There's nothing to sync or download. It's a little bit easier, and it's a little more passive experience. You just accept the shows that we produce."

In fact, if you were so inclined and you were a Sprint user with a Motorola phone, you could subscribe to both services.

Similar to iRadio, music and other content that you hear on MSpot cannot be downloaded, for good reason. "When you get into downloads, then you have all these digital-rights download issues that you've got to get into," Tsui says. "With our service, nothing is downloaded. There's a quick buffer, about 10 seconds or 15 seconds" that allows you to hear the content uninterrupted. "When the player is turned off or the song stops playing, the buffer is cleared, so nothing is stored on the phone," he explains. Still, the company does have to pay for the rights to the songs through performing rights organizations and SoundExchange.

Like other such technology trends as text messaging, for example, the United States is behind the curve when it comes to listening to music on cell phones. "In Europe this is already very, very big," Tsui says. "In major parts of Asia, specifically Japan and Korea, this is huge already. Streaming multimedia is definitely catching on."

CINGULAR STREAMING

Meanwhile, Cingular Wireless has introduced a streaming music service called MobiRadio, the first music service from partner MobiTV. MobiRadio includes 40 music channels programmed by Music Choice and organized by genre including R&B, country, electronica, reggae, jazz and classical.

According to MobiTV, Music Choice will update each channel with new music regularly. Also, the company hopes to include programming from additional providers in the near future.

Currently, the MobiRadio application can be downloaded to only three handsets, but MobiTV says other handsets will be supported before the end of the year.

Cingular is charging $6.99 per month for the service, which is not exclusive to the carrier. Users without a flat-rate data plan also will need to pay additional airtime charges for the minutes used while streaming music.

Cingular was contacted for additional information about the service for this story, but did not reply by press time. ■■■

BACK TO THE FUTURISTS:

BY BRAM TEITELMAN

AT LEAST SIX YEARS AGO, I wrote an article about a new technology: satellite radio. After satecasters XM and Sirius arrived, several more articles followed with comments from record labels and radio on the fledgling services. None of them seemed to think they would have much of an impact.

Those opinions have largely changed with regard to satellite radio and the many other technologies that have emerged.

"The fundamental issue is that anything that provides the same benefits and features of radio is essentially a substitute to radio," Mercury Radio Research president Mark Ramsey says. "That means regardless of where it comes from, it's a potential alternative, meaning it's taking time out of the radio listeners' day."

Here is a look at some of the current and future radio technologies. Billboard Radio Monitor reached out to those with a forward view of technology as it pertains to radio for opinions on some of the prospects.

The impending arrival of WiMax, a wireless broadband technology that will ultimately allow for broadband-enabled phones and cars, may have the greatest impact on terrestrial radio in the near future (see story, page 14). In fact, some are already listening to Internet radio in their cars.

AccuRadio COO and Radio and Internet Newsletter publisher Kurt Hanson listens to several AccuRadio channels via his Treo 650 cell phone. "There's a headphone jack in the Treo that I can plug into the cassette adapter of my rental car as I drive down the coast," he says. "This will work on any device that has Internet access and a media player."

He adds that it has yet to achieve mass popularity, since most media players do not support the codecs (signal translator), and until a Web browser sits where many new cars' global position systems are now (which is probably two to four years away), Internet radio in cars will not take off.

Joint Communications president John Parikhal believes

ANALYSTS GAUGE TECH'S IMPACT ON RADIO

WiMax will have an impact as well, describing the phone as a conduit to new music. "Imagine if I tell the phone company that my favorite song is Green Day's 'Holiday,' and any time I punch 'today's favorite,' I get to hear 'Holiday' as much as I want," he says. "A phone company might sell that to you for 20 cents a day. So there goes top 40's big opportunity for you hearing your favorite song. I think the combination of the phone companies and WiMax are also transformational."

Coleman Insights VP Warren Kurtzman sees "ubiquitous access to the Internet at high speeds" as having an effect on not just radio, but all consumer media. "The one thing radio can't do is get too caught up in the distribution system," he says. "Things like WiMax will happen, and whether we'll be accessing radio content through our cars or phones or whatever is crucial, but replacing, at that point, America will be blanketed with wireless Internet coverage, and it will probably make more sense for them to switch to Internet delivery. Satellite has enough bandwidth for 60 channels of music, and it's not interactive. Internet radio, once you get that in your car, it'll be hundreds of thousands of channels of music with the ability to have interactive features."

INTERNET RADIO

Internet radio is not exactly a new technology, but WiMax and other technologies have brought it back to the forefront. Many Internet-only stations are flourishing. And terrestrial radio is continuing its involvement with Internet radio.

"The radio industry has an advantage going in [against satellite radio], because we have a vastly larger audience than any 80% of his listening to Internet radio stations that were not affiliated with any terrestrial radio stations," he says. "He told me that the diary wasn't friendly to his responses, and he had trouble accurately providing his listening information because the diary essentially wasn't inviting it."

Terrestrial radio has dipped its toes into podcasting, but it might take some time to reach critical mass. Kurtzman says that during focus groups with radio listeners, many are not even aware it exists.

"Not only are virtually none of them doing it, but virtually none of them even know what it is," he says. "I do think there's a future, and podcasting could be one of the distribution technologies for getting our content out there that will have some what we really need to focus on is content. We have to look at all these technologies as new ways to get compelling content out there to consumers. If we don't have the content, all these great technologies are going to do nothing for us."

SATELLITE RADIO

While WiMax is the largest future threat to terrestrial radio, satellite radio is gaining the most headlines as a current one. Parikhal notices a definite demand for the service.

"There's a lot of parts in America where people really have problems with getting good radio reception where they are, and they're going to have the same problem with cell phones," he says. "There's still a market out there for people on the technological edge that can't get what everyone else does that satellite delivers to. As long as the programming stays strong, I think satellite has the chance to continue growing." He notes that about 10% of terrestrial radio listeners have a genuine interest in satellite radio, which, while not a category killer, could lure listeners with high income and higher educations from commercial radio.

Hanson says that satellite radio has a significant presence in cars and is making small inroads into auto and home listening, but the medium may not have an extended shelf life. "Satellites have a limited life span," he says. "By the time those satellites need other medium and we have the brand," Kurtzman says. "The question is whether the radio industry is going to leverage those assets to make these new technologies work in our favor."

Hanson brings up Canada's Standard Radio, which has several hundred Internet radio channels with a national footprint. "They're building a brand there bigger than Yahoo Launchcast Canada, and that's the kind of thing a savvy U.S. broadcaster could do."

Parikhal says, "Radio has the potential to use its Web sites much more effectively than they do now. A lot of companies are getting smarter with this. Emmis, Clear Channel and Corus in Canada are all really moving aggressively to get much smarter in what they do with their Web sites. That is a positive for radio, because radio still has a big come it can use to drive people to its Web sites."

That does not mean they will have a long-term advantage. "All radio stations on the Internet are created equal, and it almost doesn't matter that it's my local radio station broadcast online," Ramsey says. "The local station might have more awareness, but that gives it a leg up, not a permanent advantage."

Current ratings services are not making it easy to track Internet listening. Ramsey mentions an interview with an Arbitron diary keeper to illustrate the point. "He devoted about value for us in the long run, but it comes down to the content, not the distribution method. If you don't have something to podcast that people find compelling, what's the purpose?"

Ramsey believes podcasting will be an important supplement to radio listening. "It's going to turn on more people to what's on the radio, and it will time-shift and give them more chances to hear something they missed that was desirable content," he says. But he too echoes that compelling content will be the only thing that makes listeners subscribe to podcasts. Hanson believes that within two more generations of iPods, the devices will be Internet-enabled.

HD RADIO

Will high-definition radio save the terrestrial format? Signs point to no, according to our futurists.

"The only time you see people run for technology is when there's pent-up demand for it," Parikhal says. As an example, he cites the boom in FM cassette players in cars in the '70s. "Because people couldn't get them in their cars, they would go to an after-market place and get one installed. In those days, people bought a lot more than they leased, and there was a big demand for that. By the time CD players became ubiquitous, manufacturers had gotten the message. [There is] no pent-up demand for HD radio. There's lots of places where you can build a product and nobody comes."

"The only technological advances that get consumer takeoff are things that are five times better than what was there before," Hanson says, comparing CDs to vinyl. "Things that are just a little better usually don't take off. If I can get 60 channels of commercial-free music content, I'm willing to spend money on that. If I know that three stations in town have a secondary audio channel, and maybe I might like one of the three, that's not a significant improvement."

While calling HD radio "intriguing" Kurtzman urges caution as well. "I'm very fearful that a lot of radio companies are putting all their eggs in one basket," he says. "If you do that, and HD radio turns out to be not one of the technologies over the next five to 10 years that's key, then you'll be left in the middle of nowhere."

Parikhial brings up several other points: While HD side channels exist, none have exclusive content. He also says an articulated strategy does not exist and that the channels are still expected to contain commercials of some type, which he says have driven some audience away from terrestrial radio. And the added inventory will not help radio either. "They can't even hold rates where they are now, they rate-cut and cannibalize themselves all the time," he says. "Now, add more inventory with HD radio."

IN CONCLUSION

Regardless of the delivery device, analysts agree that the key for any medium, whether it is satellite radio, Internet radio in your minivan or podcasts, is content.

"It's how you package and brand that music, and what you deliver along with it that will really make the difference," Kurtzman says.

Ramsey believes radio should jump into new technologies. "Rather than trying to create an alternate spectrum that no one wants or needs, it would make more sense to jump into those alternatives that already exist and embrace them completely, even though you don't own them uniquely."

ARBITRON MAKING PROGRAMMING $ENSE OUT OF THE PPM

There is a groundbreaking format change about to engulf the entire radio industry, and its name is not Jack or Bob or some new wrinkle of rock, pop or free FM. It is rooted not within the on-air clocks but in the technology of the ratings reports of every station. Its rollout will generate a tsunami-sized effect on every department at every facility in the country.

The pending switch to Arbitron's Portable People Meter will affect every aspect of your operation—from how much money you pay your morning-drive talent to your station's marketing strategy, from on-air promotions and contests to sales targets. Regardless of your metro survey area population, it will potentially change your market's overall revenue ranking.

The radio industry is rapidly racing toward a critical currency crossroad, which will have an unprecedented effect on broadcast billings and ratings results for decades to come.

For the past several months I have spearheaded the industry initiative to assess the economic impact of the PPM on radio. Funded by Arbitron and implemented independently by the Radio Advertising Bureau, Forrester Research was selected to survey almost 500 major marketers to ascertain the potential revenue results from the PPM's implementation. The company talked to decision-makers who directly controlled dollars at the advertiser and agency level. Only 3% were at the "buyer" level.

The results were dramatically clear and consistent across every level of respondent. The radio industry is at revenue risk if it does not change to a more "reliable" ratings methodology. More than one in four surveyed said that they would redirect their dollars with a change to the PPM. Forrester predicted a net revenue swing of $696 million annually between diaries and the PPM, once fully deployed. Whether the financial estimate is exactly right or not, the message for change is clearly being sent to our industry to move to electronic measurement or put serious revenue at risk.

Arbitron's PPM testing in Manchester, England; Philadelphia; and now Houston has produced similar, somewhat stunning headlines for the industry. Greater cumes, decreased time spent listening and reduced listener-ship in morning drive are all critical coming changes to radio listening estimates.

Each deviation from the current norm brings with it major challenges to the programming and marketing of the medium. Latest releases from Houston show a dramatic 30% or greater drop in morning-drive listening, while nearly every station in the market enjoyed huge upswings in cume while posting reduced average-quarter-hour delivery. There are also major differentials in rating points with the diary's traditional long-listening PI consumer not duplicated in electronic measurement, resulting in less overall TSL for most stations.

Whether you are sitting in the PD chair or in the corner office, these ratings results will greatly alter the operational approaches of your station. If it is indeed a competitive "cume" contest with the PPM, then future advertising campaigns could feature more positioning statements than ever and less calls to action based on a TSL-related promotional event or contest. Building awareness and gaining station sampling with as big a universe as possible will be strategically more important than in the current TSL/PI world of diaries.

Every station will be actively marketing itself to become one of the choices on the expanded radio shelf. In a world of the PPM, ratings success will start with more of a cume emphasis than ever before, and programming/promotional strategies will reflect more of the same.

The listening pattern changes by daypart reported by the PPM will lead to a more intensive battle for midday and PM drive loyalties. "Revenue chasing ratings" will be even more pronounced, according to the Forrester study. When queried how altered daypart listening would change their spending habits, more than 65% of respondents said that they would shift their dollars accordingly. While morning drive demand would be negatively affected, most said that they would shift their monies to other dayparts proportionately. The operational result could produce higher-profile personality injections into those time periods.

With more dollars on the table, it would be more attractive to make people and promotional investments in those hours with a potentially higher return on investment.

With less of a dependence on morning drive, investment in that daypart could be greatly trimmed. Some major morning shows that have been teetering on the edges of success without cracking the top tier could be greatly altered or eliminated, replaced by a new wave of syndicated product.

The PPM also has shown a smaller "top of the hour" tune-in than its diary counterpart that would allow programmers much more freedom with their music clocks. This could bring an end to the current dreadful, commercial-cluttered "dark side" of the hour so many stations still shamefully employ.

The major radio groups are currently in the process of negotiating with Arbitron about the potential acceptance, pricing and rollout timetable of the PPM. While electronic measurement seems inevitable, the industry still controls the purse strings as to when and if it ever happens. If accepted, Arbitron is pitching a five-year track to the top 50 markets. A major dilemma facing the industry is what happens to the revenue and perception of diary results for metros in transition—not to mention the ones that will not see the PPM anytime soon or at all.

According to the Forrester study, when asked how ad dollars would be allocated based on PPM vs. diary market-places, 18% of the agencies and 22% of the advertisers said that they would move money out of the diary markets and into the PPM ones.

If you are sitting in any market outside of the top 10, a sales strategy shift is in your immediate future. Radio will be selling two sets of currencies for a long time, and buyers will undoubtedly pit one against another to their pricing advantage. Arbitron is proposing a campaign featuring a "CPP Conversion Chart" that would address the coming controversy. While it points to the success of TV in changing currencies, there are potentially some unique complexities when applied to radio. And it starts with the speed and depth of the rollout, which will become the centerpiece of the industry's negotiation with Arbitron. Stay tuned.

Based on the Philadelphia and Houston tests and now the Forrester results, major changes await our 85-year-old business. The future will bring less demand for morning drive, bigger ratings in other dayparts, larger station "reach," lessened "top of the hour" programming focus, changed marketing strategies, a repositioned CPP sales story and a newly discovered reach legend for the medium.

Whether you are on-air, in programming, production, promotion, sales or are the station's chieftain, the advent of the PPM will greatly affect your professional life. The train is loading, and it is ready to leave the station. Make sure that you are fully prepared to jump onboard for the track ahead, which could be potentially paved in gold for radio for many miles to come.

CHART COMMENTARY BY JOE FLEISCHER

WHEN PEOPLE THINK OF NASHVILLE, naturally they think country music. But Nashville is also a vibrant rock market and one of the best R&B/hip-hop radio markets in the nation. The download chart definitely shows the best of that down-south flavor, with Florida's D4L, Georgia's Young Jeezy, Mississippi's David Banner and Virginia's Chris Brown all making their presence felt. And definitely be on the lookout for Miami's Pretty Ricky, which makes big moves everywhere this week and is headed for the top of the charts.

SATELLITE RADIO:

BY TONY SANDERS

HOW BIG? HOW LONG?

Satellite radio is probably here to stay, if only because it is a technology that has been operational since 1990 and now, in 2005, has been licensed, or will be deployed, in many major countries around the world.

But the questions remain: Will it ever make a profit, and will the dominant name in the industry be XM Satellite Radio, Sirius Satellite Radio or WorldSpace?

WorldSpace is the original developer of satellite-based digital radio services and was founded by Noah Samara, a self-described pioneer in the technology's development. Samara's company was also one of the original shareholders in XM.

While XM and Sirius compete head to head for subscribers in North America, WorldSpace is the only licensed provider of satellite radio for the rest of the world, except for North America, Japan and North Korea.

Publicly, Wall Street analysts expect XM and Sirius to start generating positive cash flow around 2007 at the earliest and for subscriptions to continue growing at a fast clip. Long-range estimates say the amount of subscribers for the two satcasters combined will eventually reach 40 million. When this will happen is uncertain, but it is expected to be between 2010 and 2015.

Privately, however, analysts point to another, shorter time line both U.S. satellite radio broadcasters face. That is the frame one analyst dubbed a "window of exclusivity" for delivering digital content to a mobile device. This window for XM and Sirius is only going to exist for about the next five years, analysts say. None of them would venture a guess as to which new, emerging technology might take share away from the satellite radio broadcasters or how much of a share shift might ultimately occur.

One analyst feels the competitive effect from mobile broadband will be muted for at least the next five years. "I would think a bigger issue is the iPod and podcasting as an alternative to satellite radio," the analyst says.

FORECAST: PRETTY SUNNY

Laraine Mancini, chief broadcast securities analyst for Merrill Lynch, thinks the long-term prospects for XM and Sirius are good.

"I see both of these companies getting to cash flow breakeven in 2007," Mancini says. At that point, she expects subscriber levels to be about 8 million for Sirius and about 11 million for XM. Sirius currently has more than 2 million, and XM has more than 5 million.

"Right now, XM has more subscribers," Mancini says, "but I have that gap closing and the industry starting to look more like a duopoly around the turn of the decade." By 2014, Mancini expects combined subscribership for XM and Sirius to slightly exceed 40 million, with the two satcasters roughly even.

What is not clear in her analysis, or those of other Wall Streeters who track this sector, is how competition from new and emerging mobile-content providers will affect the subscribership and revenue for the two satcasters.

XM CEO Hugh Panero has said he expects XM to have 20 million subscribers by 2010. Speaking to Billboard last month, he added that the long-term objective for his company was to develop "more and more live, exclusive music and talk content."

While Mancini expects XM and Sirius to wind up as fairly even competitors, she also thinks that relationship will show uneven splits as to which company dominates with auto manufacturers and car buyers and which dominates with retail consumers. Mancini expects XM to have a larger percentage of the original-equipment-manufacturer auto market and Sirius to have a larger share of the retail consumer market.

"Sirius has focused on marquee talent," she says, a move the analyst feels will keep that satcaster top of mind with consumers.

Mancini likened that focus to creating an important link in the minds of consumers between "brand names that you know" and Sirius. She sees that as an important aspect to Sirius' competitive role in closing the subscriber gap with XM.

Mancini is quick to point to XM's own moves in securing more memorable talent and offerings, saying that "XM is being more active in the content space now."

Sirius president of operations and sales Jim Meyer says Sirius is "technology agnostic." Like Panero, Meyer says the real game is controlling and delivering content. "So, we are supportive of any method of delivering our unique mix of content to consumers, whether by cell phones or other devices."

Sirius currently has a nonexclusive agreement with Sprint, Meyer says, "so we are free to pursue other opportunities in this area."

AS TECHNOLOGIES CONVERGE...

...COMPETITIVE PRESSURE INCREASES ON SATELLITE RADIO

HARD CELL

Of course, other providers of streaming content, such as RealNetworks and MSpot, are also pursuing deals with cellular providers. Motorola has entered the competition by offering its own broadband-to-cell-phone music solution, iRadio.

Panero says XM is ready to jump into the cell-phone arena, too. "I expect that we will partner with cell-phone companies because our delivery platforms are unique and not necessarily competitive." He drew a distinction between the "nationwide digital streaming broadcast platform" of satellite radio and the "localized, two-way platform" for cell phones.

"These systems can work together," Panero says.

Meyer says the issue with competition from cell-phone carriers or other devices depends on a number of factors.

"Our agreement with Sprint calls for us to provide them with 20 channels of music," he says. "We have over 120 channels of programming, but all they wanted for now was 20 channels. That's all the bandwidth on their network that they wanted to dedicate to content from Sirius."

Meyer takes that as a "clear indicator" that cell-phone carriers are "not a content creator, as we are. They are simply retransmitting our programming."

Meyer says it is still not clear how much of their capacity cell-phone carriers are ultimately willing to devote to this kind of service, or whether they become involved in content creation.

But like Panero, Meyer says, "We don't see this as being a threat to satellite radio. They would have to create a whole nationwide infrastructure like ours—at nearly $2 billion of investment—in order to come close to what we offer today."

From the Wall Street perspective, Meyer's point was echoed, at least in part, by one analyst who says that "the interoperability of these new [cellular and broadband] networks is a big question." The analyst feels there are "bandwidth limitations" in the cellular network that prevent cellular providers from offering "a material amount of content."

STRIKE UP THE BROADBAND

Meyer says he is not concerned about the looming competition from other mobile broadband options, such as Wi-Fi, WiMax or any other technology. "It's not about technology alone," he says. "Content is the key to this business, and we have invested considerable time and money to develop the best content in all of radio. Without the creative programming, all you have are devices."

Still, there are signs of hedging to cover all bases. XM recently paid $196 million for WCS Wireless. This deal gives XM spectrum adjacent to its own in 15 of the top 20 metro areas. The WCS spectrum is available to provide a wide variety of two-way communications services. There has been speculation that the WCS acquisition could allow XM to expand its local traffic and weather data services, launch a video service or add satellite channels targeting certain markets.

Sirius has developed a different hedge of its own. Meyer says Sirius plans to introduce "a proprietary modulation technology next year that will, initially, allow us to add 25% more capacity to our system, without using compression."

Such a move could, in theory, make it possible for Sirius to add as many as 30 more audio channels without affecting the sound quality. It is not clear how much of this modulated spectrum might be needed if the choice was to provide a video service.

"I like satellite radio being married to cell phones," one Wall Street analyst says, "even though I'm not a huge fan of mobile media. But, from a marketing standpoint, you've already educated the population to buy cell phones. That's a good opportunity for satellite radio, because you marry it to a device with huge penetration."

CASHING IN ON PODCASTS A REALITY

BY KATY BACHMAN

PODCASTING IS FAST BEING EMBRACED BY corporate radio, the industry often cited as having the most to lose from the nascent medium in ad dollars and listeners.

At first, radio business models for podcasting focused on providing convenience to listeners. But if radio's latest forays are any indication, podcasting could create healthy incremental revenue from advertising as it matures.

"With radio trying to find new revenue streams, this is one of the obvious ones," says Matt Feinberg, senior VP of national radio for Zenith Media, who has bought podcast advertising for one client. Radio companies "were slower to put it together, but now they've gotten up to speed."

Premiere Radio Networks, which already does a brisk eight-figure business offering subscription podcasts of Rush Limbaugh, Jim Rome, George Noory and other high-profile personalities at $60-$70 per year, has cut its first advertising deal with Starburst, which will pay six figures next year to sponsor a three-minute, customized podcast based on Ryan Seacrest's "American Top 40" countdown.

"We're going to deploy ourselves into an ad environment through short-form podcasts that contain specific, relevant programs that are sponsor-supported," Premiere president Craig Kitchin says.

Premiere is also about to take podcasting visual. The Clear Channel-owned syndicator announced Nov. 28 a deal with Maven Networks to provide 60-second video segments of "The Rush Limbaugh Show" to subscribers of Limbaugh's 24/7 premium content service beginning Dec. 12. That will make Premiere the first major radio broadcaster to embrace direct delivery of video to the new iPods, which hit the market last month.

ABC Radio Networks is also making money using the subscription model for many of its top personalities and ESPN Radio. Launched just five months ago, Verizon was the initial sponsor for ESPN podcasts this year, and McDonald's and Novartis are lined up for next year.

Even local radio podcasts (five to 10 minutes in length) are catching on with local advertisers. About 64 Clear Channel stations offer podcasts based on local content. Among the local advertisers buying 15-second sponsorships airing before the content are Virgin Mobile in New York; the Apple Computer store in Dayton, Ohio; a Honda dealer in Los Angeles; and a Mercedes-Benz dealer in Phoenix.

"Podcasting is absolutely not a threat. We've created inventory that never before was available. We're just skimming the surface," says Evan Harrison, executive VP of online radio and music for Clear Channel. "It will be a meaningful part of our business as we move forward."

Among advertisers, the talk about podcasting is getting louder, even though it is not a line item in media plans. But most agencies agree that it is the media companies with the content and know-how that stand to gain the most from the undeveloped medium. Major broadcasters and publishers have access to content, and they have access to distribution channels to succeed in the space," says Brandon Starkoff, media director for Starcom.

Buying media-branded content is also a more credible, reliable buy for advertisers if they are not producing their own podcasts. "Media-branded podcasts have an easier time. How do you wade through the [amateur] podcasts? Is the content reliable? You don't know what they might broadcast tomorrow," says Natalie Swed Stone, director of national radio for OMD. "Integrated buys that involve personalities, where the product makes its way into the program, that's what's getting the money."

WIRED TO THE MAX... WIMAX, THAT IS

BY CHUCK TAYLOR

Broadband, wireless and podcasting are well-known terms to broadcasters, and for the most part, many industry insiders believe they pose more of an opportunity than they do a competitive threat. But there is a potential predator sitting on the fence.

Meet WiMax, short for worldwide interoperability for microwave access—a burgeoning powder keg with the potential to make global AM/FM radio as quaint as a Victrola. Satellite pay radio is no safer, and high-definition radio might be even more vulnerable.

Dramatics aside, WiMax is percolating with outrageously sweeping capacity, acting as a wireless carrier with unheard-of geographic reach for everything from cell phone and voice over Internet protocol service to video and gaming applications and Internet service—wherever you are. That means WiMax offers potential to bring Web radio into vehicles, giving consumers an open door to limitless audio options.

WiMax is high-speed wireless Internet access with a footprint the size of a city and larger.

At this stage, proponents admit that the idea of Internet audio serving as an alternative to terrestrial or satellite radio is not even on their radar, as they target more sophisticated applications. So first, someone has to invent a radio capable of portably honing Internet entertainment—and at this point it could be the end of the decade before it is even considered. But certainly it will be, and once that happens, AM/FM radio will lose a primary calling card: free.

SERVICE WHERE IT DOES NOT EXIST

“Early trials are focusing on bringing wireless technology to businesses and homes where it doesn’t exist,” says Dr. Mo Shakouri, VP of marketing for the WiMax Forum and assistant VP of business development for Alvarion, which develops point-to-multipoint wireless access systems. “We’re working toward accessing PDAs and multimedia within laptops and 3-D mapping of location-based services within vehicles. In Korea just a few days ago, Korea Telecom demonstrated how future cars will have broadband in them.”

Shakouri says that with so many other applications are being considered, broadband-capable radio is a novel idea: “I believe that traditional radio services will remain for a long time. They’re extremely low-cost and very efficient.” But, he adds, “this is a very interesting question. We’ve seen how radio usage has evolved since the iPod. WiMax could certainly affect radio businesses in certain markets. Radio on demand could impact the user experience.”

Tim Downs, editor of Broadband Wireless Business magazine, says, “First, WiMax does have the potential to be an enabling technology for the vehicle experience that you describe. When it will be the most cost-effective technology for manufacturers and consumers to deploy it is another story.”

“Currently, audio services, including Internet radio, can be delivered via satellite transmission and even other wireless solutions, such as cellular and high-speed data services from mobile carriers,” he adds. “WiMax, however, could in the future replace the satellite solution as a technology to deliver and support real-time local information services—such as mapping, e-commerce, traffic, etc.—to vehicles, and not just cars, but buses, trains and the like.”

TANGIBLE TECHNOLOGY

Mark Ramsey, on his Web site radiomarketingnexus.com, cautions that in 2004 29% of North American households were connected to the Internet via broadband, a number that will balloon to 62% by 2010.

“That’s many years before HD radio is likely to be common. What do you think this means for the media we’re likely to use to listen to music, when high-speed wireless Internet access is more common than a newfangled radio?” he asks.

Wi-Fi is destined to be a free commodity in many cities, including Austin, Philadelphia, New York, San Francisco and Portland, Ore. Ramsey cites a Reuters report that says more than 100 U.S. cities are setting up wireless networks, in addition to 1,000 local governments worldwide.

“Free wireless audio access? There’s another name for that: radio,” Ramsey says.

He further warns, “What about when the iPod gets Wi-Fi and iTunes starts streaming their radio stations to iPods in all sorts of places? Of course, their current list of stations will expand rapidly. Once the iPod gets Wi-Fi you will see all sorts of new Apple partnerships.”

Dr. Mo Shakouri

“And after Wi-Fi is replaced by WiMax ... AM? FM? What’s that? It’s the brave new world—any content, anywhere, anytime,” he says.

Ramsey notes that erosion of radio listening is already becoming an entrenched habit: “My sister doesn’t listen to radio. Her office, her co-workers and the hundreds of listening quarter-hours they represent every week belong to streaming audio, which will only grow as high-speed connections become ever more ubiquitous.”

STILL IN THE DISTANCE

Even so, WiMax has yet to get its feet wet as a tangible technology; it is currently undergoing tests to establish conformance standards.

Spain-based company Cetecom was selected as the official certification laboratory, through which all potential products are scrutinized. The overall development of the technology is being overseen by 350 companies that constitute the WiMax Forum, including equipment manufacturers, operators, system integrators, silicon and component makers and application providers.

The technology is gaining traction first in Korea, Taiwan and Singapore, “where interest is very strong,” Shakouri says. “The Asian nations believe this is the future of communications.”

Foremost, WiMax is being developed as a way to provide broadband service in nations that are facing challenges—for example, where fiber and coax cables cannot easily be installed in homes because of prohibitive expense or unsympathetic geography, including Spain, the United Kingdom, Eastern Europe and Latin America.

Alvarion announced on Nov. 16 that its BreezeAccess VL mobile network equipment is slated to be deployed in several major cities on the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido, following the successful deployment of wireless gear in the town of Koshimizu.

Because of its ability to cover large geographic areas, WiMax is viewed as a next-generation Wi-Fi by the industry. The technology’s specifications improve upon many of the limitations of Wi-Fi by providing increased bandwidth and stronger encryption.

Further, Sony and Microsoft are considering the addition of WiMax as a feature in their next-generation game console, which would allow gamers to create ad hoc networks with other players.

“This may prove to be one of the killer apps driving WiMax adoption,” according to a WiMax Forum report.

The forum says the first generation of WiMax equipment will be outdoor-installable, akin to a satellite dish, for about $350, with certified products to be announced by year’s end and commercial availability on a limited basis in first-quarter 2006. Second-generation products will be indoor-installable in the $250 range, available in second-quarter 2006. Third-generation gear—and this is the type that most affects broadcasters—will be integrated into portable devices, available in the $100 price range. These products are expected to hit in the first quarter of 2007.

According to Monica Paolini with Senza Fili Consulting, which offers advisory support on wireless data technologies and services, “The first WiMax-certified products expected before year-end are a key benchmark for the entire WiMax community. After much hype and anticipation, we will be able to access WiMax performance in real networks, instead of making educated guesses from abstract specifications.”

She adds that a number of vendors—Alcatel, Motorola, Navini, NextNet and Nortel—are already racing to develop portable and mobile products.

MAJOR POPULATION AREAS

The first U.S. cities likely to be outfitted with WiMax, according to the WiMax Forum, are Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco, Seattle and Providence, R.I.

“The initial focus will be in the major population areas,” Shakouri says. “It’s going to take several years to move beyond the nation’s city centers.”

Proponents of WiMax say that wireless coverage will be measured in square kilometers, while Wi-Fi is measured in square meters. According to WiMax promoters, each WiMax base station would enable high-speed Internet connectivity in a radius of up to 31 miles.

WiMax is not intended to be a replacement for Wi-Fi, but a complement to the technology. WiMax can extend the reach of Wi-Fi on a larger geographical scale. Technically, Wi-Fi is designed for local area networks, whereas WiMax is designed for metropolitan area networks.

“For sure, this is going to happen,” Shakouri says. “We think this is something that people are going to be willing to pay money for. Before the end of the decade, WiMax will be a reality.”

CATHY HUGHES:

INSIDE RADIO ONE

BY GAIL MITCHELL

TENACIOUS. It is the one word that comes to mind after talking to Cathy Hughes about the challenges of launching—and building—Radio One.

Now in the midst of a yearlong celebration of its 25th anniversary, Radio One is the nation's seventh-largest radio company and the largest African-American-operated electronic media company. Billing itself as the "Urban Radio Specialist" while promoting its community-bonding philosophy, the company owns 70 stations in 22 markets, including Washington, D.C., flagship talk WOL and R&B/hip-hop KKBT Los Angeles.

Working with son Alfred Liggins, who succeeded her as president/CEO, founder and chairperson Hughes took the company public in 1999. Since then Radio One has acquired a 51% interest in Reach Media, which owns the syndicated "Tom Joyner Morning Show." Radio One also programs the Power (channel 169) on XM Satellite Radio and owns 40% of cable channel TV One, a joint venture with Comcast targeting African-American adults.

There have been some bumps along the way, most recently the departure of KKBT personality Steve Harvey, who has publicly aired his unhappiness with the company. But Hughes, a college dropout who became a mother at 16, keeps on pushing regardless of detractors. "I make mistakes," she says, "but I don't let anyone discourage me. I keep trying."

How did you come to purchase your first station?

I was VP/GM at Howard University's WHUR in Washington, D.C. Neighboring WOL had gotten into payola trouble: One of its jocks had been executed and his body dumped on the interstate during rush-hour traffic. WOL was the first minority distress sale following the [Federal Communications Commission's] passage of that legislation. So we were like a test station. FM was starting to snatch a larger share of audience, but there was still a significant amount of value and history behind WOL. We went up against 87 other companies for the station.

What was your biggest obstacle in launching Radio One?

Financing. Twenty-five years ago, banks did not have broadcasting divisions. They didn't understand radio stations as being fixed, hard assets then. Back in 1979, radio stations were also family-owned and -operated. There were no big conglomerates like Clear Channel. So it was very difficult to break in. I gave my business presentation 32 times, and everyone said no. On my 33rd try, it was to a woman who was a loan officer at Chemical Bank in New York. It was her first broker job. And she said yes.

And the easiest part?

When I did my morning show on WOL. It still fuels me. When I was in Los Angeles in October to kick off the anniversary celebration, I was at KKBT at 5 a.m., producing 4 1/2 hours with the morning team [John Salley and Ananda Lewis], including the pre-show prep. Interacting with the audience is the easiest part for me. I love it and miss it.

When I was a kid, I was always the organizer. Having a talk show, having a radio station, empowered me to be a leader of the pack, to be a pacesetter.

The nuns used to tell my mom, "Cathy's too bossy." But my mom was a wise woman who understood I was a manager in training. I give her a huge amount of credit. People see bossiness as a great character trait in a man. But not so in a woman.

What triggered the decision to become a majority owner in Tom Joyner's Reach Media?

Tom was doing just fine. But he realized he could do that much better in a partnership with another major black corporation than he could being alone. We had an appreciation and understanding of his vision.

Black people have to learn business. We need to understand how consolidation takes place and how white companies use that to grow and thrive. Can you imagine if Bob Johnson and BET had joined forces with us?

What is the biggest threat to terrestrial radio?

The biggest threat to the communications industry period is technology. The business model may change, but I don't think terrestrial radio is going to go away. In the next three to five years, you'll see major movement in the top 10 markets in regards to going digital. Within the next 10 years, it will be overall.

Radio One is absolutely exploring digital; we're on the iBiquity board. But it's an expensive proposition. The average cost is $1 million per station. That's where part of the reluctance comes in. Another argument is that everyone doesn't have receivers. But people aren't going to get receivers if radio isn't transmitting a digital signal either. We can't expect the consumer to take the first step. This is something that is going to directly benefit our industry. But if we don't start putting digital signals out, we are going to be dinosaurs.

What is your take on New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer's payola investigation?

In all the years I've been in radio, I've never once heard or read about a radio person breaking into a record company and forcing an invoice on an executive. It just blows me away. This is a problem created and perpetuated by the record industry.

This has gone on since record companies were first created eons ago, and the blame keeps getting shifted. It may take a different form, but it's the same, ugly, demonic snake. The easiest way to shut it down is to stop doing it. Don't write any more checks. At Radio One we have a central committee that's proven quite effective in bird-dogging our operation.

Radio One has received criticism that despite it being an African-American company, it employs very few black programmers, especially in large urban markets. What is your response to such criticism?

The allegations are unfounded. Out of about 47 programmers only 14 are non-

African-American, and three of those are Hispanic. Second, approximately 70% of our 1,800 employees are African-American. Nobody in the broadcasting business has given or continues to give more opportunity to African-Americans than Radio One and now, TV One. Given the very small number of African-Americans in the entire broadcasting business, our numbers are staggeringly high. We are very proud of our employment record and actively seek to create a very diverse workplace.

We are proud of the non-African-Americans that work at Radio One, and they are here because they were the best candidates for the job. In fact, the African-American employees are also here because they were the best candidates for the job. We have very strong, talented people at our company, which is why we have been the industry growth leader since going public in 1999.

How Barenaked Ladies are coming down your chimney this year.

Barenaked Ladies are sending their new Christmas single "Elf's Lament" through DMDS. Leading Record companies trust DMDS to deliver their new music to radio stations, everywhere.

We do it online, on time, and securely. No discs, no couriers, no nasty reindeer.

It's like the best present ever.

THE CHARTS

THIS WEEK IN DATA. For complete charts, there's always more at www.BillboardRadioMonitor.com

LEGEND TO CHARTS

Charts are ranked by dominance except for Jazz, Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country charts which are based on stations' impressions, computed by cross-referencing exact times of airplay with Arbitron listener data.

Songs showing an increase in detections are indicated by a green circle. Songs that have not moved in the previous week regardless of chart placement. A song will also receive a bullet if its percentage loss in detections (audience for Jazz, Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) does not exceed the percentage of nonplayed stations covering for the format. For example, the Country chart, a song that has been on the chart for more than 20 weeks will generally not receive a bullet, even if it registers an increase in detections (audience for Jazz, Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country). Country titles which receive a bullet are not eligible for Nielsen BDS certification.

AUDIENCE TOTALS are the charts are derived, in part, using merger Arbitron Inc. copyrighted Person 12+ national estimates, under license.

AIRPOWER: awarded to songs appearing in the top 20 on both the Airplay and Audience charts for the first time with increases in both detections and audience. Airpower awards do not appear on the Latin and Christian, gospel charts.

GREATEST GAINER: awarded to the song with the largest increase in detections (audience for Jazz, Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country).

MOST AIRPLAY ADDS: awarded to the song registering air on more than three hours at the most stations for the first time this week.

TIES: A song with the best percentage differential (audience differential for Jazz, Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) over the previous week is marked with a green arrow. If the song is still on the chart, the title that is being displaced on the chart stations at that format will be marked red.

RECURRENT RULE:

Songs below the top 20 (top 10 for Adult Top 40, AC, Adult R&B, Heritage Rock, Dance, Christian and Gospel) become recurrents and are removed from the chart after 20 weeks. In addition, songs that have been on the chart for more than 52 weeks and have become No. 20 will become recurrents and will be removed from the chart. Recurrent country titles move to recurrent after 20 weeks if they rank below No. 15 in either audience or detections.

Nielsen BDS certification is the award of Nielsen BDS certification to all monitored stations, including satellite and national networks, across the U.S. and Canada, numerical following symbol indicates minimum level of 100,000 downloads.

Indicates the source of the Nielsen BDS or research data provided by Promoglobe.

Playlists are listed in order of TIA weekly count, beginning with the highest-counting station. Counts are updated twice yearly following the release of the spring and fall Arbitron surveys.

A+ AIRPLAY ADDS

Airplay adds with four more detections at stations for the first time this week.

IMPACT! Songs at Airpower level and higher with a gain in detections or with a percentage loss in detections equal to or better than the monitored downloads in the format.

INITIAL IMPACT: Indicates song's first appearance on the Impact! logo.

THE SPIN

HOLIDAY RUSH TAKES OVER AC CHART

Bullets on this week's Adult Contemporary chart are understandably hard to come by as numerous stations in the format temporarily say goodbye to current music and switch to all-holiday mode. Only three songs inside the top 20 of the chart receive bullets, and two of those are holiday titles.

During the past five years a holiday-themed title has claimed the top of the AC chart during the last week of December. In 2000 New-Song's "The Christmas Shoes" topped the list, followed by Jim Brickman's "Simple Things" in 2001, Josh Groban's "O Holy Night" in 2002, Brickman's "Sending You a Little Christmas" in 2003 and Groban with "Believe" in 2004.

The top contender for 2005 looks to be Kimberley Locke's "Up on the HouseTop" (Curb), which vaults 31-5 in its second week. Four holiday titles debut this week, led by MercyMe's "Silent Night" (Curb) at No. 19.

BROWN'S 'RUN' CONTINUES; STEFANI STACKS UP A FOURTH TOP 10

Chris Brown's debut single goes to No. 1 on the Mainstream Top 40 chart as "Run It!" (Zomba) displaces Kelly Clarkson's "Because of You" (RMG) after a four-week run.

Brown is the first male artist to take his initial chart appearance to No. 1 at the format since Gavin DeGraw scored with "I Don't Want to Be" in January. This ups the number of new-artist chart-toppers to three, as D.H.T. also reached the summit on its first try with "Listen to Your Heart" in September. Last year Ashlee Simpson and JoJo were the only two artists whose debut songs hit No. 1.

Further down the chart, Gwen Stefani becomes the second artist this year to place four singles inside the top 10 of the Mainstream Top 40 chart from the same album as "Luxurious," from "Love.Angel.Music.Baby." (Interscope), rises 11-10. Earlier this year, Clarkson was the first female artist to do so since Pink's 2002-2003 run. Janet Jackson and Usher remain the only two artists to score five top 10s from the same album; Jackson in 1993 from "Janet" and Usher in 2004 from "Confessions."

Green Day And U2 Celebrate Quintuple Top 10 Success

Green Day becomes the third act to have multiple albums spawn five charted Modern Rock tracks as "Jesus of Suburbia" (Reprise) enters the list at No. 37. The song is the fifth track from "American Idiot," which matches the five hits the trio's "Dookie" album generated in 1994 and 1995. The first act to accomplish the feat was R.E.M., which did so with 1992's "Automatic for the People" and 1994's "Monster." More recently, Linkin Park landed five tracks from "Hybrid Theory" and " Meteora."

Meanwhile at Triple-A, U2 becomes the first act to twice score five chart tracks from an album as "Original of the Species" (Interscope) debuts at No. 14. That makes "How to Dismantle an Atomic Bomb" equal to 2000's "All That You Can't Leave Behind." The only other act to have five charted tracks from an album at Triple-A is Dave Matthews Band, which did so with 1996's "Crash."

HILL HITS WITH BACK-TO-BACK TOP 10 TITLES

Faith Hill gets her 19th Country top 10 with "Like We Never Loved at All" (Warner/Curb), which hops 12-10. On the heels of her No. 1 "Mississippi Girl," Hill scores back-to-back top 10s for the first time since 1999-2000 when "Let's Make Love" (No. 6) and "The Way You Love Me" (No. 1) hit the upper portion of the chart.

Trina Gives Rap Chart Female Flavor; Babyface Gets Lucky 13th

"Here We Go" by Trina Featuring Kelly Rowland (Atlantic) claims top honors at Rap, despite dropping 242 detections since the last survey, to become the first No. 1 by a female lead artist since Lil' Kim teamed up with 50 Cent on "Magic Stick," which hit pay dirt in the July 4, 2003, issue.

At Adult R&B, Babyface rises 11-10 with "Grown & Sexy" (RMG). It is the singer/producer's 13th top 10 at the format as an artist. He is now tied with former protégé Toni Braxton for third on the list. Only Gerald Levert (19) and Luther Vandross (16) have more.

More colorful than your morning team.
Brighter than your drive-time guy.
More exciting than the girl on-air at 3 AM.

Better looking than all of them combined.

Songs are blind tested online by PromoSquad using multiple listens and a nationwide sample of carefully profiled music consumers. Songs are rated on a 1-5 scale; final results are based on weighted positives. Songs with a score of 65 or more are judged to have Hit Potential, although that benchmark number can fluctuate per format based on the strength of available music. For a complete and updated list of current songs with Hit Potential, commentary, polls and more, please visit www.hitpredictor.com. © 2005, Promosquad and HitPredictor are trademarks of Think Fast LLC.
