Introduction

Throughout most of my career as a university professor of architecture, I have been fortunate to serve as a conduit between the culture/history/geography of Japan and that of the West. In 1976-77, I served as a Senior Fulbright Research Scholar to Japan, spending a year traveling throughout Japan to study the ancient rural and urban Zen-based architectures of the 13th thru 19th Century. Since that time, I have lectured and written extensively on subjects related to Japan. I am also a life-long radio enthusiast, having found unending pleasure in using broadcast radio as a window on the cultures of the world. In recent years, I have specialized in listening to broadcasting from the Pacific and East Asia, especially of course, Japan. While some of these broadcasts are available on shortwave and now, the internet, my primary means of listening to Japanese radio in the past decade has been listening to long-distance medium wave broadcasts from my summer home located on the Canadian/US border, north of Seattle.

In recent years, it has become increasingly clear that the primary professional reference for worldwide radio, the World Radio and TV Handbook, was woefully inadequate and inaccurate in its coverage of Japanese broadcast radio. In January 2000, it appeared to me that the information available on the Internet had matured to the point that a much more accurate list of Japanese medium wave stations might be developed from various Japanese sources. The major difficulty in accomplishing this, of course, was the fact that virtually all websites of Japanese radio networks are written exclusively in the Japanese ideography called "kanji." Although I read a limited number of kanji, this year-long project would not have been possible without the extensive assistance of my former student and close friend, Professor Takazi Okuda of Nihon National University. Several Japanese students studying in the United States have also contributed to this effort. Professor Okuda and I are pleased to present this list for the use of broadcast professionals in the West as well as radio enthusiasts around the world. We believe that it the most complete and accurate list yet published.

Process

The initial database for this list was created from a listing available within the community of radio enthusiasts. I believe that this list was initially transliterated in the mid-1990s by radio enthusiasts in Japan and was based on a listing (in kanji, of course) periodically published commercially in Japan. As this current project comes to a close, it is apparent that this earlier listing was about 90% accurate, even some years after its completion.

After the initial database was complete, each of the sixty-plus commercial radio networks in Japan was accessed via their web site. The majority of these sites contained a page listing their medium wave outlets by frequency and location, including the many low power (usually 100 watts) repeater transmitters that have proliferated in recent years. The best generalized portal to access these web sites is The National Association of Commercial Broadcasters in Japan which contains an English language version of their directory with hyperlinks to individual broadcasters and also lists the individual mailing addresses of networks/stations in the roman alphabet. The commercial radio segment of the master database was checked and updated using the information from each broadcasters web site. However, until very recently, there was no reliable means to update the listings of the extensive array of government-owned stations operated by Nippon Hoso Kyokai (NHK.) Thankfully, the Japanese Ministry of Post and Telecommunications (MPT) recently created a web site that allows the user to generate an official listing of all licensed transmitters in Japan for a user-determined portion of the radio spectrum. Unfortunately, this list only contains the frequency, power and geographic coordinates of the transmitter. The MPT database contains no indication of call letters, ownership or "city of license" of the transmitter. This official MPT transmitter list was printed and each of the 600+ locations was plotted by its geographic coordinates using Microsoft's Encarta Virtual Globe. The Microsoft product proved to have a considerably more extensive listing of Japanese villages and hamlets than did Rand McNally's New Millennium World Atlas. As the listing of transmitters was developed, a determination was made of the location of "the city of license." This was quite easy to do in the case of the major (1 kW. or larger) stations. However, many of the 100 watt repeater stations were located almost equidistant from several hamlets. In those cases, the "city of license" was temporarily assigned as a "best guess."

It was then rather easy, using the annotated MPT list, to check the NHK listings from the original database. There were a number of cases of conflict. These were each investigated individually. Many of the conflicts were generated by the "best guess" approach to assigning "city of license" to the small repeater transmitters as discussed above. Where the original database listed a nearby hamlet, that original listing was considered to take precedent over our "best guess" location. NHK stations that occurred on the original list, but were not found on the official MPT list, were removed from the database. There were also a number of small repeater stations, transmitting on exclusive NHK frequencies, that were found on the official MPT list but that did not occur in the original database. It was assumed that these stations were recent additions to the NHK networks and these listings were added to the database. To call attention to these few instances, there is an asterisk (*) placed to the right of the city names in the LOCATION field and a notation as to the source of that particular listing was placed in the REMARK field: "Shown on MPT web". These additions are one source of potential minor inaccuracies since the author had to use the "best guess" to determine the city of license for the LOCATION field of the database in each of these cases.

The annotated official MPT list also afforded us the opportunity to crosscheck the listings of stations found on the current web sites of the commercial networks. There were a handful of conflicts between the MPT list and the stations own web sites. These were impossible to resolve with confidence. One would expect that the Ministry of Post and Telecommunications database would be complete and accurate, but one would also expect the station/network's own web site to be accurate. In this one instance, stations were placed in the database when shown in only one source, not the other. Asterisks and remarks also flag these entries.

The database field recording PROGRAM identifies the key station of the regional network and its "repeater" stations. This information was taken from the web pages of the various commercial networks. In the case of the NHK stations, the information in this field was taken from the original database developed in Japan some years ago and may not be entirely accurate today.

Finally, just as the first version of this list was to be published on internet in early February 2001, a group of Japanese radio enthusiasts completed their own similar project and published two lists of Japanese MW stations on their website. Although their lists were less comprehensive than this one and apparently did not use the MPT database, we are particularly indebted to these Japanese enthusiasts for their Herculean effort at translating kanji information for the remainder of us to access. These most recent Japanese lists did serve to clarify some of the remaining areas of concern in this listing. Our cross-checking with their list and referring yet again to our primary sources has also increased the accuracy of this document. Any errors which remain in this list, and there surely are at least a few, are our responsibility not theirs.

Updates And Corrections

An effort will be made to update this list periodically and then to issue complete new versions. Interim orrections and additions will be issued as needed. The author would appreciate corrections and additions from any source. Please provide both the information and its source to:
