"Used the World Over"

A word of appreciation to the amateur

TOO often, in the endless drive and universal desire for that hide-and-go-seek dollar, thoughts of old friends and old alliances are lost in the hum and crash of the machinery of business. And it is a penalty of the success of any organization or individual that the old-time intimate contact, the rubbing of shoulders over mutual problems and the sharing of disappointment and exultation is a privilege not forever to be enjoyed.

Looking back a few years—prior to 1918—a small handful of men scattered over the length and breadth of the land and linked together only by their common interest in wireless, were quietly and steadily laying the foundation for what is unquestionably the greatest single industry and means of entertainment in the world's history . . . and these men were known as "hams." What an immeasurable debt of recognition and appreciation is owed these pioneers of radio!

With equipment and accessories of the crudest kind, many of them of the "home-made" variety, one by one apparently stupendous handicaps were overcome and almost without exception the receiving and transmitting equipment of today had its beginning in the attic or barn wireless-room of a "ham" five or more years ago.

The old-timers will remember the power units of those early days when dependable batteries for radio service were yet to be marketed. They will remember, too, a laboratory in Madison, Wisconsin, from which they secured not only specially designed batteries but also a constant supply of authoritative research data.

All unknowingly that service, invited and given willingly to those earnest amateurs and which multiplied with the increasing interest in radio to proportions impossible to correctly care for as a strictly laboratory service, outgrew its swaddling clothes and blossomed forth into the construction, advertising, service and sale of Burgess Radio Batteries.

Known favorably for their high capacity, remarkably low resistance, quick recuperation, length of service and absolute dependability, and with the network of licensed amateurs as the basis of distribution and sales, Burgess Batteries became the standard of the radio world—a standard which, though later followed by other manufacturers, has yet to be equalled.

If this 'advertisement' were to contain a chronicle of Burgess achievements or triumphs performed with the aid of Burgess Batteries, it would require far more space than this page to record them.

We might reproduce here the first advertisement in the world of a battery designed exclusively for radio service—the first flat "B" Battery—the first verticle battery—the first dry Radio "A" Battery. We might enumerate just a few Adventures of Burgess Batteries—Paul Godley used them in Scotland on the First Amateur Transatlantic Test—McMillan's never-to-be forgotten dash above the Arctic Circle, from where Don Mix kept in communication with the A. R.

R. L.—with Schnell in the South Seas with the Pacific Fleet—the trans-Atlantic transmission of photographs—these and hundreds of other adventures are interlocked with the history of radio and of Burgess products, and with the part both performed in the march of the world's progress.

We like to look forward and to anticipate what you are going to require next—but we like to turn back the pages to the days when we knew many "hams" by their first names and all of them by their call letters.

To the pleasures of those early days—the daily airway contact, the mutual problems and close co-operation in arriving at their correct solutions, the Burgess Company owes a great part of its tremendous success.

Further—we do not hesitate to acknowledge this debt. We feel a deep sense of obligation to the licensed amateur and are proud beyond adequate expression that our facilities, experience and batteries were a part of that vital period of radio development when lack or failure of an important piece of equipment at that time might very possibly have discouraged experimenters and radio might yet be what it was then termed—merely a temporary 'fad.'

Our appreciation is reflected in perhaps the only manner at our command—the making of batteries as good or better than those which first earned the esteem of engineers, amateurs, the public in general—and "hams" in particular!

The BURGESS TRIPLE PLAY

From Schulte to Hoffman to Mix

9EK

A few ideas from Schulte, recorded on an A.R.R.L. Radiogram blank are rushed to Hoffman in the radio building, 9EK, and "W.H." gets on the air. If "Don" Mix isn't too busy chewing with Dublin or Wellington from Burgess Isle, Florida, 4DM, he receives the message and the triple play is complete.

W. B. Schulte, Chief Engineer of the Burgess Battery Company, needs no introduction to the A. R. R. L., nor does Hoffman, "W.H.," or Mix "Don," or Zurian "P.Z." Rarely indeed has a manufacturer of any product the benefit of such genius and practical experience, as these Burgess Boys combine.

A great majority of the A. R. R. L. members know and are interested in Burgess experiments and their ramifications, and without prejudice to our own efforts many improvements in the initial attempts at short-wave communication and low-power transmitters were discovered and developed by the Burgess Staff.

The Detroit Arctic Expedition with which the A. R. R. L. is acting as the radio link, carries Burgess-designed and built low-power radio apparatus, operated by Burgess dry-cell batteries.

And in the future, as in the past, we place a great deal of faith in the knowledge that what little the Burgess organization contributes to the radio industry will in turn share directly with the contributions of others who are working tirelessly in its development.

Contributors to your radio entertainment

VERY probably hidden away in the cabinet of your receiving set, the batteries you use are nevertheless surrendering their power unseen and unheard.

And to be able to contribute their energy and to add to the complete efficiency of your receiving equipment, those batteries must combine every desirable factor and formula known in the electro-chemical field.

Such Batteries are Burgess—products of the Burgess Laboratories—products which have been used by practically every famous explorer, the majority of amateurs and the leading radio engineers.

That's why when you use Burgess Radio 'A,' 'B' and 'C' Batteries you are using batteries which assure the utmost dependability, longer life and complete satisfaction.
