CHART FOCUS

After a record-breaking 1989, 1990 was a bit of an anti-climax for the record industry. Sales of singles held their own, but album sales dipped significantly, and the only musical trend of note was that there was no musical trend, middle aged international famous tenors taking their place in the chart alongside obscure teenaged "bleeps" merchants.

New talent is often said to be the lifeblood of the record industry. Last year it coursed through the veins more thinly than most would have hoped.

Dance music was the dominant singles genre of the year, accounting for 30 per cent of sales, and nearly all of the most successful newcomers were slaves to its beat. Indeed, of the top 10 acts making their singles chart debut in 1990, only three were from other areas: Maria McKee, Michael Bolton and Luciano Pavarotti — and though newcomers in the sense that they hadn't scored a hit single before, all have lengthy recording careers behind them.

Formerly a member of the critically acclaimed but commercially unsuccessful Lone Justice, McKee's previous claim to fame was that she feared Feargal Sharkey's number one hit A Good Heart.

Michael Bolton was the surprise success story of the year. Previously best known as the writer of hits for Cher, the unfashionably long haired singer's powerful R&B influenced vocal style won him a couple of Top 10 hit singles. His album, Soul Provider, was easily the biggest seller by a chart newcomer, and should soon top 1m sales.

Snaps were the top new singles act (our strict interpretation of which means that, though they were the best-selling singles act of 1990, New Kids On The Block are disqualified from being described as new as they had a major hit at the tail-end of 1989) surviving more scandal than most.

Snaps are typical of a new breed of acts who made a major impression on the charts in 1990. With one foot in the pop camp, and the other firmly rooted in rap, they have achieved a degree of crossover that few could equal.

Don't underestimate the pop/rap hybrid of the Top 10 new singles acts in 1990, fully half of them were from this area. Apart from Snap, there was MC Hammer (third in the rookie chart of the year), Vanilla Ice (fourth), Betty Boo (seventh) and Partners In Kryme (tenth).

While dance music sells singles, the album market continues to be dominated by rock and pop acts.

There were some outstanding successful albums in 1990. Phil Collins' But Seriously sold 1m copies for the second year running. Madonna's The Immaculate Collection went platinum four times over and classical music went mainstream with the collective and individual efforts of Messrs Pavarotti, Domingo and Carreras selling in vast quantities, overshadowing even Nigel Kennedy's achievements in bringing culture to the masses.

The rise and rise of the compilation album continued, with nearly one in five of all albums sold being by "various artists" — a record. The album market overall was in decline, particularly in the second half of the year, though there was a glimmer of hope in the success of bands like The Happy Mondays and The Charlatans. At the forefront of the indie dance and indie rock movements, they proved highly successful. Their influence and that of their peers should make the next 12 months more interesting than the last 12.

COMMENT

We come to the first Music Week of 1991. It is necessarily truncated because of the long Christmas and New Year break, but inside you will find a full chart and new release listings service, plus the Christmas singles and albums chart (backing the pullout chart).

Inside too is the annual Music Week Wall Planner, giving details of the major events of the year.

The next Music Week will be published as normal on Monday, January 7. Join us then.
