PASH MUSIC STORES, 5 ELGIN CRESCENT, LONDON W11

BOWLES BROS. BAND support Don McLean on his British tour, opening at London Royal Albert Hall on May 1. They have a pre-tour gig in their own right at London Hammersmith Riverside Studios this Sunday (30).

THE CIMARONS play Leeds 'F' Club (May 1), Newcastle New Pine Theatre (2), Glasgow Cinders (4), Aberdeen University (5), Dundee University (6), Edinburgh Clouds (7), Bradford University (10), Retford Porterhouse (11), Brighton Sussex University (12), Colchester Essex University (13) and London Oxford St. 100 Club (16). After a European tour, they return to play Birmingham Digbeth Civic Hall (June 9), Oxford St. Edmunds Hall (17), London Alexandra Palace (18), Manchester Polytechnic (24), Liverpool Eric's (25) and Plymouth Polytechnic (July 1).

LINDISFARNE, whose reunion tour was announced last week, have brought forward their Nottingham University gig from May 6 to 4, and now play Huddersfield Polytechnic on May 6. Venue changes include Preston Guildhall instead of University (May 13), Bradford St George's Hall instead of University (17), Edinburgh Odeon instead of University (18) and Eastbourne Congress Theatre instead of Festival Hall (23). Their Portsmouth gig on May 28 is now confirmed for the Centre Hotel.

CHARLEY PRIDE has brought forward his show at Liverpool Empire to May 8, to avoid a clash with the May 10 European Cup Final, in which Liverpool F.C. are involved. And he has added a second night at Ipswich Gaumont on May 21.

ON THE ROAD

STEEL PULSE follow their headlining gig at London Roundhouse last Sunday with a string of May dates, climaxing in another London concert. The reggae band preview their June debut album at Birmingham Top Rank (May 9), Keele University (10), Doncaster Outlook (11), Leeds Polytechnic (12), Huddersfield Polytechnic (13), Brighton Top Rank (16), Portsmouth Locarno (19), Dunstable California (20), Bournemouth Village Bowl (22), Bath Tiffany's (23), Plymouth Woods Centre (24), Penzance The Garden (25), Torquay 400 Club (26) and London Harlesden New Roxy Theatre (27).

I. RDY arrives in Britain in June to play a number of selected dates around the country. Virgin Records confirmed this week... and gospel singer JESSE DIXON starts a European tour on August 26, involving at least eight gigs in Britain.

JENNY HAAN'S LION are back on the road, now with keyboards man Kenny Newton replacing second guitarist Glen Frazer. They play Swansea Nutz Club (tonight, Thursday), Basingstoke Technical College (Friday), London Woolwich Thames Polytechnic (Saturday), London Downham Saxon Tavern (May 4), Oxford St Peter's College (6), Blackpool Jenkinson's (8), Sheffield Limit Club (9), Scarborough Penhouse (12) and London Camden Music Machine (13). Their new EMI single "Forgotten Dreams" is due out soon.

RIKKI AND THE LAST DAYS OF EARTH are back on the gig circuit, coinciding with the May 5 release of their DJM single "Twilight Jack". Supported by labelmates Siren's Rats, they play Liverpool Eric's (tonight, Thursday), London Isleworth Polytechnic (Friday), Manchester University (Saturday), Bradford Royal Standard (Sunday), London Marquee (May 1), Birmingham Barbarella's (3), Exeter Blue Lagoon (4), Gloucester venue to be announced (5), Plymouth Polytechnic (6), Chelmsford Chancery Hall (7), London Woolwich Tramshed (8), Brighton Polytechnic (13), Swindon Affair (15), Canterbury Art College (18), London New Cross Goldsmiths College (19), Lincoln Bishop Grosseteste College (20), Dundee University (26), Aberdeen University (27) and Edinburgh Tiffany's (29).

YACHTS are back on the road with gigs at Newbridge Club and Institute (this Sunday), Swansea Circles (May 1), Reading Bones Club (3), Nottingham Sandpiper (4), Kilderington Country Club (5), Middlesbrough Rock Garden (6), Whitley Bay Rex Hotel (7), Leicester Phoenix Theatre (11), London Islington Hope and Anchor (12), Brighton New Regent (13), Hatfield The Forum (16), Aberdeen McRobert Hall (19), Dumfries Stagecoach (21), Leeds 'F' Club (26), Birmingham Barbarella's (26) and London Kensington Nashville (27).

JOHN WILLIAMS appears at London Royal Albert Hall next Tuesday (2), performing material from his new album "Travelling". His first contemporary album for three years. Special guest for the concert is Ralph McTell.

BATISH LIONS, the band comprising former Mott and Medicine Head members, are supporting AC/DC on their British tour which opened yesterday (Wednesday). They also headline in their own right at London Marquee on May 8... and reggae band MATUMBI support Ian Dury on his U.K. tour, opening in Birmingham on May 11.

FLOYD DIXON, the near-legitimate West Coast R&B singer and piano man, makes his only British appearance on June 19 when he plays London Kensington Nashville.

WILKO JOHNSON SOLID SENDERS, the new name for the Wilko band, have added another four dates to their current tour—Salisbury Town Hall (May 18), Port Talbot Troubadour (19), Orford Pembroke College (20) and Chelmsford Chancery Hall (21).

STEVE HILLAGE BAND have added Brighton Top Rank—May 5 to their extensive U.K. tour, and their May 20 gig switches from Malvern Winter Gardens to Reading Hexagon.

AFTER THE FIRE have set three more London gigs—at Camden Music Machine (May 9), the Marquee (21) and Woolwich Tramshed (June 13). Another new date is at Southend Roots Club on May 14.

SPITERI, the London-based salsa band, begin a month-long Tuesday residency at London Oxford St. 100 Club on May 9. This replaces the venue's weekly punk gigs which, as reported last week, are now being dropped.

ELKIE BROOKS has added a second show at Southampton Gaumont to her British tour, which opens this Sunday (see Gig Guide). The extra gig is on May 29.

DAVID COVERDALE'S White Snake play St Albans City Hall (May 6) and Ashington Regal Cinema (7), as a warm-up to a major concert tour they'll be undertaking in June, supporting a big-name act. Details are expected next week.

DRE STRAITS are to support Climax Blues in their ten-day British tour, opening May 4. After appearing in BBC-2's "Old Grey Whistle Time" on May 16, they support Spix on their European tour (May 22-June 3). The band's first Phonogram album is issued on June 9, and they will be touring Britain in their own right that month to promote it.

FLAMIN' GROOVIES have added Guildford Civic Hall on May 31 to their upcoming British tour... and GERRY RAFFERTY has added Coventry Theatre on June 2 to his itinerary.

MAGAZINE have added another two dates to their British tour, reported two weeks ago—at Cardiff University (May 6) and Manchester Ruiz (8).

SANDY DENNY DEATH SHOCK

SANDY DENNY, one of Britain's top contemporary folk singers, died last Friday (21). Earlier in the week, she fell down a flight of stairs and suffered a brain haemorrhage. She went into a coma, from which she never recovered.

After working with The Strawbs in their early days, she first established herself when she joined Fairport Convention in 1968. Two years later, she formed her own band Fotheringay, re-joining Fairport in 1974. She left again two years later to pursue a solo career, and last year headlined some concerts under the banner of Sandy Denny & Friends.

She was much respected by the critics, all of her albums—solo and with Fairport—receiving a varying degree of acclaim. She recorded several solo sets for Island, and was married to ex-Fairport member Trevor Lucas.

A tribute to Sandy appears in next week's NME.

At 63 degrees below zero my amps never sounded better.

"Like most bands, Thin Lizzy earned its reputation playing on the road.

This particular night, we were booked to play the Chicago Stadium. During the night the Alaskan weather had come down into the United States.

The temperature was 63 degrees below zero. None of us had been through anything like it before.

The city was completely trapped. There were accidents and ambulances were stuck three miles away trying to get through.

They blasted out warnings on the radio that no one should go out with any skin exposed, because it'd turn to frost-bite in three minutes.

Of course we were all worried how the amps would play.

We'd got all the stuff outside in the truck. And it all started freezing over.

Then a roadie got frostbite on one of his legs trying to get the gear out.

Well, the amps were perfect and 20,000 people managed to see us. Crazy!

I'd seen other bands using them but now I'm calling the Marshall 50 watt combo my sound.

It's the sound I've been looking for."

Besides Scott Gorham on lead guitar, Thin Lizzy comprises Phil Lynott, Brian Robertson and Brian Downey.

They've had a string of LP successes from 'Vagabond of the Western World' to their latest, 'Bad Reputation'.

The albums of the last few years have benefited from the gutsy Marshall sound.

Scott Gorham uses five 50 Watt Marshall Valve Combos. Four are stacked up for his guitar and a fifth is used as a cross-stage monitor for Brian's guitar.

The Marshall range now includes two new Master Volume Valve Combos. The 2103 100 Watt and the 2104 50 Watt Master Volume Combos.

The Master Volume Control allows the musician to regulate the overall volume whilst the pre-amp volume control produces the warm overload or clean biting sound as required, making these combos exceptionally versatile. The full Marshall tone equalisation is provided with Presence, Bass, Middle and Treble controls. A standby switch is provided to keep the amp in constant readiness.

NME NEWS

MADDY'S BACKING BAND

MADDY PRIOR has now completed the line-up of her backing band for her debut solo concert tour, opening May 11. It comprises Ray Flacke (guitar), Chris Stainton (piano and organ), Pat Donaldson (bass), John Lingwood (drums) and Kevin Saviger (synthesiser). Release of Maddy's previously-reported new single "Rollercoaster" has been delayed one week by Chrysalis, and now comes out on May 5.

MERGER ABANDON TOUR

MERGER, the new-wave reggae band, have abandoned plans for a British tour as they are busy preparing to record their second album—plus the fact that Winston Bennett has been dropped from the line-up, with Tony Cole coming in on keyboards. Barry Ford and Ivor Siadman are now in Jamaica, re-mixing the band's new single "Waterfalls", to which hanjo and steel guitars have been added.

VISITORS CHANGE NAME

THE VISITORS are not on the verge of splitting, neither was their guitarist Joe Aleppo killed in a car accident earlier this month, as reported by two other music papers last week. To combat this rumour, they're changing their name to Solid State, and Joe is reverting to his real name of Mike Andrews. They're in the process of bringing in a new black lead singer, and are about to sign with Lightning Records.

DRONES HIT PROBLEMS

THE DRONES, the Manchester-based new-wave band, have run into two problems this month. First, guitarist Gary Callender quit due to the inevitable "musical and personal differences", but they've overcome that by deciding to remain a four-piece. The other snag is less easy to solve—they were signed to Manchester's Valer Records, but that company has now gone out of business, so they're busy looking for another label.

BOYFRIENDS WANT SINGER

THE BOYFRIENDS are looking for a new organist and vocalist, following the departure of Chris Smith, who played his last gig with them at London Marquee yesterday (Wednesday). He told NME he was leaving because he "wasn't happy with the musical direction the band is following", and he now intends to form his own outfit.

CHICKEN SHACK RE-FORM

CHICKEN SHACK, one of the leading British blues bands of the late '60s, have re-formed for the umpteenth time! Under original leader Stan Webb (guitar), they now comprise ex-Vinegar Joe bassist Steve York, ex-Babe Ruth drummer Ed Spevack, Robbie Blunt (guitar) and Dave Winthrop (sax). They've just recorded an album called "The Creeper" and they'll be going on a British tour to coincide with its release. Meanwhile they play a few warm-up gigs, including Bristol Granary tonight (Thursday).

FRANKIE MILLER HAS MADE THE BIG BREAKTHROUGH.

Frankie Miller's brand new album "Double Trouble" is simply Frankie at his most shattering best. It features no less than ten high energy rock and roll tracks.

Six of which are Frankie originals plus a rendition of Marvin Gaye's "Stubborn Kind Of Fellow".

All of which give vent to that searing, savage vocal style which has become very much the hallmark of Frankie Miller and Frankie Miller alone.

But it's not just Frankie's voice which is worth listening to on "Double Trouble".

Produced in England and America by Jack Douglas, with horn arrangements by Chris Mercer, the entire album sets a whole new standard of excellence for Frankie and the band.

Listen to it soon. You won't believe your ears.

THRILLS

WHO'LL BE THE NEXT IN LINE?

QUAKE in your pointed-toe Denson boots and keep your fingers firmly crossed, all ye who would venture into the world of pop stardom — The Shitkicker is at hand!

Yes, we here at Thrills feel it's time for some introductions... So meet The Shitkicker, the smartass putdown merchant who dreams up all those sneaky remarks hidden away down the side of the Thrills pages — which have already, in three short weeks, stirred up countless controversies and lost the of NME literally hundreds of outraged readers.

And the denizens of showbiz tremble. Indeed, following last week's scathing, and completely unwarranted, attack on Phil Lynott, at least one up-and-coming young Irish rocker was heard tremulously worrying whether the boot would go in in his direction next — a suggestion which simply caused The Shitkicker to sneer contemptuously with amazement that such upstarts should consider themselves halfway worthy of his venom. The Shitkicker spits upon you!

Enjoy your anonymity, ye wormlike faceless ones — for where the spotlight falls, only death and derision await you.

THE FIRST SERIOUS ATTEMPT by any of the former members of The Sex Pistols to activate a new band was premiered by Paul Cook and Steve Jones last Saturday in sleepy old London town.

For while Johnny Rotten slumps further and further into making a vocation out of supercilious put-downs — he reminds me of a juvenile Bill Grundy every time he opens his wretchedly cynical gob — and Sid Vicious and his boring girlfriend drain the last drops of gutter press intrigue out of their only pathetic talent for self-abuse, before dissolving into the anonymity that is their only feasible destiny ("come in, Mr. and Mrs. Vicious, you're 15 minutes is up"), the other two Pistols got together alongside ex-Dolls/Hearbreakers jive boy Johnny Thunders, with a bass player in the form of French teenager Henri Paul, to play their first ever set down at (where else?) the Speakeasy.

The gig itself had been arranged prior to the coalition by Thunders and Speak manager Jimmy Carter-Fey, supposedly as just another in Thunders' series of impromptu Living Dead liaisons. Indeed, both Jones and Cook (not to mention dear old Sid Vicious) have put in one-off appearances alongside J.T. and his floating cast of dissolute Saturday evening comrades-in-arms like Peter Perren and Mike Kellie of The Only Ones over the last couple of months.

But this performance was a more serious affair — even if the shambling spirit so prevalent at the latter series of gigs was still present.

Ever since The Heartbreakers split to the States for a Yuletide vacation and found themselves stuck there literally for months with only the cold comfort of Transatlantic rumours that their London-based centre-pin had ditched his comrades in frustration, or that manager Lece Childers had done the dirty on them, Thunders had remained faithful to the concept of a Heartbreakers reformation first and foremost. At first, the Speakeasy gigs and solo recording activity were little more than ways of supporting himself plus family through a few lean months.

Then, after a one-single-one-album deal was signed with Anchor subsidiary Real Records under the aegis of A&Rist Dave Hill, Thunders himself immediately financed a flight back, for Mrs Walter Lure and Billy Rath, plus an unknown U.S. drummer named Spider that the latter pair had found and considered good enough to fill the long departed Jerry Nolan's drum-stool. This reunion was consolidated some weeks back — but the subsequent rehearsals proved disillusioning to Johnny Thunders, who, during his Living Dead sojourn, had felt more inclined to use self-penned material that was slower and less rama-lama rock-out orientated than The Heartbreakers' previous staple diet.

The result then, after a handful of rehearsals, was a disgruntled Thunders deciding to opt out of the reformation and concentrate more on his solo career.

Not long after that, Thunders ran into infamous buffoon and publicist B. P. Fallon — a man whose P.R. rep has taken quite amazing leaps and dives in its time but whose work in successfully hoisting budding boyos The Boomtown Rats onto the British public has recently upped his credibility quotient considerably — at a Patti Smith reception. The guitarist requested Fallon's aid in managing him.

Fallon had in fact almost worked as The Heartbreakers' publicist before and now he happily agreed to become Thunders' manager — but not before Johnny had more or less been forced to sign a long-term deal with Anchor/Real (again, purely as a solo attraction) in order to pay for his newly-acquired London flat.

However, infinitely more encouraging than Thunders' lighted recording situation is the current alliance with Cook and Jones.

It's been no secret that both Pistols have virtually idolised Thunders — Jones, in particular, used the Dolls guitarist as his premier model and inspiration, while Cook openly admits that the Pistols "ripped the Dolls off something rotten", particularly at the outset. Thunders, on the other hand, holds both Jones and Cook in the highest regard as rock musicians. An alliance 'twixt the two parties has seemed more than obvious ever since the Pistols split.

The actual coming-together has been slow, however, what with Jones and Cook poncing around in Rio with Ronnie Biggs to little productive avail. Indeed, when our own Charles Shaar Murray questioned the just-returned Cook on whether he and his ally were seriously considering working with Thunders, the answer was strictly in the good natured negative.

Feelings, though, have definitely changed. The whole of last week was spent deep in rehearsals, with Cook, Jones, Thunders and bassist Henri Paul working on a repertoire of The Chantays' "Pipeline", Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Are Made For Walking", Derek Martin's "Daddy Rolling Stone", Ro Diddle's "Pills", the Dolls' "Subway Train", Thunders' own "So Alone", "You're So Strange", "Leave Me Alone (a.k.a. "Chatterbox")", "She's So Untouchable", "London" (ironically Thunders' rejoin to the Pistols' virginal "New York"), and "Too Much Junky Business", plus both sides of his solo single "Dead Or Alive"/"Downtown", which is due out on Real Records next month.

No Sex Pistols songs have been worked up so far — but if things go as planned, Steve Jones will be contributing his own songs and singing them as well. One of Jones' newest creations, "Black Leather", has already been worked out by the collective, with Steve taking lead vocals, while he mostly contents himself with back-up vocals on other songs.

As yet, no permanent moniker has been granted to this burgeoning combo (at some premature stage, Thunders wanted "Johnny Thunders' Rebels" but that has since been nixed) and there is still a plethora of contractual details ready to act as a big hindrance to any activity.

The first gig was hardly an auspicious introduction, mark you.

The band's first-time-round sloppiness was exaggerated somewhat by Thunders himself, who was embarrassingly "out of it". He staggered around the stage, eyes glazed, voice completely shot and barely keeping his balance, but somehow kept buoyant by the thrashing rock steady beat provided principally by Paul Cook, hero of the hour and the one participant who seemed fully in control of his side of the action.

Steve Jones kept mostly to rhythm, along with the old Pete Townshend windmill power chord thrash and a bunch of back-up vocals. Sober and alert, however, he reminded me of Keith Richards during those Ronnie Wood five gigs of four years back, when Wood's screw-ups were infuriating Richards to the point where he was deliberating just when and how to take over the spotlight himself.

Bassist Henri Paul kept to the back, trying to look cool with the classic fag slanted out from the edge of his mouth. His cool quotient was damaged irreparably however, when on further scrutiny one noticed that the fag itself wasn't lit.

DEAD BOY NEARLY GETS DEAD

DEAD BOYS drummer Johnny Blitz came the closest he's ever going to get to living out the band's name without actually winding up at the crematorium, when he was attacked and almost killed last week.

It happened at around 4.00 am last Wednesday morning, when he and one of the band's roadies were walking down New York's 2nd Avenue after leaving the Bowery nightclub CBGBs.

Blitz and his companion became involved in a shouting match with a passing carload of Puerto Ricans, which culminated in them leaping from their car and assaulting Johnny Bliz, who wound up in Bellevue Hospital, where he was treated for stab wounds around his heart and lungs.

After ten hours' heart surgery, the doctors announced that Blitz would survive — though he'll be out of action for a long time. He is still in the intensive care unit.

His companion is currently being held by the New York police.

BOSTON BARMAN EXPLAINS MEANING OF 'NEW WAVE'

I'D LIKE TO DESCRIBE Willie 'Loco' Alexander, Boston New Wave Cult Figure, as a man of immaculate dress sense, enormous sensitivity, and a sober, retiring disposition.

I'd like to, but the fact that he spent the afternoon slouching in an executive armchair, hat on backwards, feet on table, quaffing slugs of neat vodka, doesn't make it that easy. But it did restore my faith in humanity.

Assisted at all times by his equally entertaining bassist, Severin Grossman, Willie gradually unravelled the history of his 15 years as a veteran of the Boston bar band circuit. It ran rather like a drunkenly edited movie script.

He told me about his highly organised work with the post-Lou Reed Velvet Underground.

"I toured with them for a while, playing piano and singing. I didn't even know the chord changes on most of the songs. By about the eighth gig, I finally got a semblance of what to do."

It wasn't till '75 that he established his own Garage Records.

"It was just a post office box, with a dog named Chunga as a lawyer. I was always talking about referring contracts to Mr Chunga. No-one ever knew he was a dog."

I got him onto reminiscing about managers he had known and loved. It appeared that he worked best with men who shared his gentle, withdrawn outlook on life.

"I think he ended up killing some people," he reflected about an early bossman. "He's in a nuthouse now. He was always bragging about running people over, and stuff like that... We needed him at the time."

Under a slightly more official management, Willy, together with Severin, David McLean (drums) and Billy Loosigian (guitar), formed Willy Alexander and The Boom Boom Band. They whipped up an enormous following overnight with their strange amalgam of rock'n'roll, R&B, and New Wave.

As evinced by the spontaneity of his past history, nothing even remotely connected with The Boom Boom Band could be called premeditated. He described the writing of one number, "Kerouac", as "an accident... like most of my songs."

Their debut album was recorded in only one week. Did they consider cutting a basic tape, and then improving it?

Severin: "No. The impact of the thing right there and then is what's really important. You don't need more than that time."

Willy: "In the old days, it was one microphone, one take. It was exciting. It was raw."

He also made it clear that by never playing two sets the same, by not including a lyric sheet with the album, and by changing the lyrics of the songs every night, he was trying to preserve some sense of the spontaneity with which they were written.

It would also make it harder for critics to intellectualise about his music. Anything that kept him away from direct contact with his audience was "a total misunderstanding."

"I don't want to do festivals. Playing to some guy half a mile away, baked out of his brains—that's not contact. I've got to see a reaction."

In between snatches of booze-ridden conversation about obscene movies, punctuated by his snapping a few holiday pics of your roving reporter and lensman, I managed to elicit this final statement.

In what respect do you think you're New Wave?

"Call it New Wave, New Wave... anything. It was rock'n'roll when it started. Then everybody became intellectuals cos they dropped a lot of acid—seeing God every time they listened to a record. And it just got out of hand, and the music got more and more bland. Now all this New Wave, it's just coming back to rock'n'roll... the basic energy of rock'n'roll. That's all it is."

"WE PREFER TO DO standing venues. I mean, our band is, like, to dance to, not sit back and listen. We've had some ridiculous situations on this tour. Twenty-thousand-seaters. We're just not a band that can play to people like that. It's a different scale over 'ere, right. I mean, you call a small venue, say, like two thousand people, which is pretty large in England."

Yeah, first time in America, boys? It's always the same—and The Jam are no exception. Bruce Foxton, in L.A., continues the tale:

"We done a gig in Arizona just before we come 'ere and that was a circular stage. And it rotated. And it was a seated venue. Well, we want to play straight out. 'Cause, I mean, you start to say, turn on a few people in one area and they had to wait seven minutes before we come round again so they could see us, you know. A real ridiculous situation."

"And another thing we was really pissed off about, when they did stand up and dance they got thrown out."

The Jam's largest gigs were opening for Blue Oyster Cult and Angel. How were they?

"They really bore the ass off me." But, "they've been pretty fair. I mean, I've knocked Blue Oyster Cult enough. I don't like their music. That's all I don't like about them and we shouldn't have been billed with them."

With only two nights in Los Angeles, the band didn't have much time for sightseeing. ("We've seen the signposts to all the famous places.") But had they managed to see anyone else's gigs?

"We went along to one last night, at the Whiskey. It's about six months behind what's happening in England. I dunno... the bands seem to be a lot better in England. I haven't been really knocked out by many new-wave bands recently. I think that's basically because I'm so tired of it."

"People have said, 'Well, how important is it for you to make it in the States?' Obviously we'd like to. But we're not gonna sit down and say, 'Well, look guys, what we're doing now is not sort of winning the crowds over. We're gonna have to get lasers and an incredible light show and grow our hair.' They've just got to take it or leave it, really. It's only us that's going to lose by it."

Could you see moving to New York or Los Angeles?
"Not at the moment, I couldn't... and if I had a lot of money I could afford to stay in England whatever the tax problems are."

pretending to be a 'rude man' even though he hates 'rude' and has given up his beloved junk food in a pathetic attempt to attain some sort of 'vibes' image

Bob Marley returns to Jamaica for the first time since his attempted assassination. NEIL SPENCER cabled this report.

KINGSTON, SATURDAY

BENEATH RASTAFARIAN banners and a full Caribbean moon, Jamaica's two leading politicians — Prime Minister Michael Manley and opposition leader Edward Seaga — shook hands on stage at Saturday's "One Love" peace concert headed by Bob Marley.

Assembled for the sight were nearly 200 of the world's press, including camera crews and journalists from America, Europe and Cuba, and upwards of 20,000 people, who half-filled the massive National Stadium where the concert took place under heavy police and military guard.

Held to commemorate the 12th anniversary of the visit of Emperor Haile Selassie to Jamaica, and to raise funds for the Peace Movement, the concert took place in an atmosphere of devotion and optimism, an emotion given further dimension by the massive nationalist slogans surrounding the arena: "Build Jamaica With Discipline", "Unite Struggle Produce", etc.

Besides the politicians going through what was evidently a pre-arranged ritual, the audience was also witness to the sight of the top-ranking gunmen from the previously warring ghettos of West Kingston embracing each other and dancing together like excited football fans.

These were two men like Bucky Marshall and Claude Massop, who a few months ago were facing each other down over gun barrels. Since last January, when suddenly 'peace broke out', they have been working together in the Peace Movement, and these last few days had given press conferences at Marley's former home in Hope Road, Kingston, where the singer himself had been gunned down in December 1976.

This was the first time Marley had set foot in Jamaica since that incident.

On the bill were some of the cream of Jamaica's musicians. First off Lloyd Parks and We People provided the backing for a stunning salvo of talent as The Meditations, Dillinger, The Mighty Diamonds, Culture, Dennis Brown, Trinity, Leroy Smart and ten-year-old Junior Tucker all delivered excellent sets, with the zany Culture outstanding. Althia and Donna also came on to sing... guess what!

Around this time the only disturbance of any real size took place, when a number of people decided to storm the McDonald tunnel entrance. An hour of violent skirmishes followed before the police and heavily armed soldiers sealed the entrance, but not before about 200 people had entered.

The next two acts — Jacob Miller & Inner Circle and Big Youth — provided completely different interpretations of the rasta and reggae heritage. Miller was wildly energetic, lewd and comic with his populist anthems; Youth cool, elegant, and devotional.

During Miller's set, Manley and Seaga arrived and, shortly after, Killer Miller donned a riot policeman's helmet and paraded along the stage smoking a spliff and singing "Peace Treaty Is Coming Home Hurrah" to the tune of "Johnny Comes Marching Home".

It's unlikely that any of the political dignitaries present took exception to Miller's buffoonery, but many were evidently ill-at-ease during a Peter Tosh set that was strictly 'no jesterin'.

The former Wailer, clad in a black judo suit and guerilla beret, interspersed his set with lengthy oratorical denunciations of social injustice and pacans to black pride, and directed a harangue at Prime Minister Manley personally on the subject of Jamaica's ganja laws before playing "Legalize It" which he dedicated to "all those who have been humiliated for an ickle draw of jah herb".

Just to rub salt in establishment wounds he smoked a spliff onstage while a dread blew cumulus clouds of ganja from a chalice stage front, defying arrest by the many assembled soldiers and policemen.

The ferocity of Tosh's malevolent and obscenity-studded diatribes were more than matched by the set he played, with Tosh standards like "400 Years", "Burial" and "Stepping Razor" being given dazzling workovers by a band which boasted the finest rhythm section on the island in Sly Dunbar (drums) and Robbie Shakespeare (bass), who was this critic's choice as man of the match.

Recently signed to Rolling Stones Records in the U.S., Tosh was watched from the wings by Mick Jagger, who witnessed that the Stones have acquired a dangerously powerful foil for their upcoming American tour. The previous day Jagger described the peace concert as "very important".

It was left to Ras Michael and the Sons of Negus to consecrate the stage with a statley set of rasta drums and chanting before Bob Marley and the Wailers belatedly took the stage for the finale.

It was interesting that, of the three original Wailers, Tosh was adopting a vigorous rebel image, Marley was working alongside the establishment, and Bunny Wailer was conspicuous by his absence.

Clearly under some strain, Marley put in an energetic and almost desperate performance for the assembled media host. After opening with two rastafarian hymns, he ran through a selection of "Natural Mystic", "Natty Dread", "Rastaman Vibration", "War", "Jamming" and "Trenchtown Rock" before the ritual of joining together the politicians.

In many ways it was a moment of paradox and anti-climax, but besides attracting welcome funds for the Peace Movement — a movement which clearly matters enormously to ordinary Jamaicans — the concert proves that Jamaica's future is intimately bound up with the doctrine of rastafari.

CARNIVAL DETAILS

THIS COMING SUNDAY (April 30) will see the biggest public celebration of human solidarity since Martin Webster and his buddies slipped off their jackboots to softshoe their way to the polls.

Organised by the Anti Nazi League in co-ordination with Rock Against Racism, Hackney Campaign Against Racism, Hackney Community Relations Commission and Tower Hamlets Movement Against Racism and Fascism, the event will proceed in three stages, which, for the purposes of this announcement, we might term The Rally, The Carnival and The Festival.

● The Rally begins at 11.00 am in Trafalgar Square, where arrivals from all over the country will meet to hear a few short addresses, possibly including one from Tom Robinson, before The Carnival starts its 3½ mile journey to Victoria Park, Hackney at 11.30 am.

● The Carnival, scheduled to thread its joyful way along The Strand, Fleet Street through the City, out to Shoreditch and thence via Bethnal Green Road and Old Ford Road to arrive at the park by 2.00

TERMINAL WEIRDNESS À PARIS

(Airport terminal, that is. Meanwhile somewhere up in some posey skyscraper, KRAFTWERK are boring everyone stiff . . .)

THE TERMINAL BUILDING at Charles de Gaulle Airport is a large concrete doughnut, the only non-artificial light coming from the central hole, where windows overlook a collection of perspex and metal transport-tubes traversing the hole at varying angles and directions, connecting different floors of the doughnut.

The effect is evocative of the overground city in Fritz Lang's Metropolis, and, for that matter, of an old promo shot from Kling Klang Verlag, Kraftwerk's music company. The irony is impossible to ignore.

The ostensible reason for holding the "premiere" of Kraftwerk's new album, "The Man Machine", in Paris is that Kraftwerk are big in France — big to the tune of 350,000 copies of "Trans Europe Express", in fact — so a motley collection of media people, liggers, record company people and New Europeans in general has been shuttled there to attend the band's intriguingly-titled "Soirée Rouge".

Red, you see, is the dominant colour motif in "The Man Machine", corresponding to conceptual overtones of revolution and totalitarianism — a theme I'll develop at greater length in the review on page 39. Suffice to say, for the moment, that the reverse-printing of the letter "R" on the chic invitation is less a typographical error than an intentional Russian connotation.

The soiree is held at a penthouse club called Le Ciel De Paris (The Sky Of Paris), literally the highest point in the city where 300 people can be fitted — a cool 56 floors up.

The first thing you notice about the place is the lights. Dozens of red lights, some set on tripods, some mounted atop the banks of speakers in the corners, others strategically scattered around the room. As yet, they're dormant.

A home-movie screen is set up at one end of the place, and there's a video-projector facing another screen along one wall. Next to the video-screen is an alcove, presumably used by go-go dancers in the natural course of events, but tonight housing life-size dummies of the band, neatly attired in red shirts, dark slacks and black ties adorned by a sequence of tiny red lights, standing behind various items of Kraftwerkian instrumentation. The effect is, to say the least, disconcerting.

The emphasis on red, however, doesn't extend to the food: there's no scarlet version of Des Esseintes' black dinner, only canapés with caviar and the like, and vodka to wash it down. Needless to say, I pass up the solid and stick to the liquid.

After a short while, the machines are set to work: first off, the album starts playing, accompanied by the synchronised lights. The cine-projector is set in motion — Metropolis, of course — and things start to get a trifle pm, will feature at least eight floats, five of them carrying live music, including two steel bands, two rock bands (as yet unnamed) and the reggae group Misty; the other floats will be supplied by Women Against Fascism, ANL and RAR.

A spokesman for ANL told Thrills that, although the number of floats was restricted, there may well be one or two more, featuring "surprise guest personalities." Naturally there will also be a goodly number of clowns, banners, lollipops, flags and other carnival paraphernalia, and EMI have promised to supply a fair few thousand whistles to add to the party spirit.

● The Festival begins at 2.00 pm and although the running order has yet to be arranged, the following four hours will be in the very capable hands of Patrik Fitzgerald, X-Ray Spex, Steel Pulse, The Clash and the Tom Robinson Band. All, of course, are donating their services free of charge.

RAR have organised an eight-foot high stage and a 10,000 watt sound system to ensure that everyone gets to hear and see what's happening. Inside the park, toilets and food and drink at "non rip-off prices" will take care of the bodily functions — though outside of the park you'll be taking your chances with the usual merchants that flock to these kind of events.

Security in the park is being handled by RAR's own people, the police having promised to keep a low profile throughout the whole day.

At the end of the party there will be a traditional festive jam on stage, for which Tom Robinson has written a special carnival song.

The ANL refer to the upcoming bash as "the biggest anti-Fascist event in Britain since the war; a tribal reaction, brought on by national hostility to the Front; a carnival in favour of everything the Front are against." They told Thrills that people will be joining the event from all over the country, including 25 coachloads from Manchester, 12 from Sheffield, 20 from Leeds, a trainload from Glasgow, parties from Cardiff and Swansea and numerous contingents from elsewhere.

RAR also rightly point out that this will be the biggest opportunity so far for the new wave to demonstrate its solidarity and that, although there is an obvious political motivation for the event, the emphasis is on Carnival.

"This is not another Lewisham. The object is to have good fun, good times with good music. Our slogan is: 'Go with the music, take to the streets'."

See you there?

uncomfortable. The music's loud — too loud for easy conversation; and everywhere you look, there's one of those red lights shining directly in your eyes. There's even one over the video-screen, for Christ's sake, making it impossible to view the damn thing.

Kraftwerk have set up (probably quite deliberately) an alienating, oppressive environment with their beloved machines. A sensory assault course. The effect of the lights, for instance, is to force you to look at the ground. The sight of a roomful of howed heads invited comparison with the ranks of workers in Metropolis; and, ironically, it's the cool overground set who're being forced to bow, alienated by fifty-five floors of power and prestige from the plebs below.

Periodically, the video shows a promo film for "We Are The Robots", the album's opening cut and probable single. Like the rest of the album, it's unrelenting electronic disco mekanik of the state-of-the-art, top-this-Giorgio Moroder variety. The film uses neat juxtaposition of dummies and humans, incorporating a "showroom dummies" dance and some quite disturbing superimposition of singing human lips on dummy heads. A cut above the average mug-shot stuff, it'd be great on Top Of The Pops.

A large number of "Soiree Rouge" innuendoes seem to be French punks acting out their ideas of le style punk, which from the look of things are gleaned from Riz magazine. The phonetic gesticulation of the French language stands as evidence aplenty of their mania for style; emphasis is placed more on the veneer of behaviour and fashion than on any possible ideological elements a phenomenon may contain. In other words, they're a bunch of shallow poseurs, in the face of which one can only find recourse to mild jingoist banter.

The advance promotion for the album shows red shirts and black ties, so of course there's a whole crowd of Kraftwerk Klones wearing just that. Mes chers, I just didn't know where to put my face when the band finally arrived, dressed to a man in black shirts and red ties! I shall never be able to hold my head up at le salon punk again!

Kraftwerk, of course, are bound by the constraints of their image; Ralf looks serious, Florian smirks, and Karl and Wolfgang smile ingratiatingly. Under the circumstances, all save small-talk is impossible, and conversation is pretty limited. I'm rather disappointed, as it happens, that they actually appeared in person at all. Surely the artificial representation (dummies, film, tape) would have been more in keeping with their Futurist tendencies?

As the vodka runs out, so does the evening's momentum. The band seem bored. So do all but the hard-core tiggers. The silent Russian film which follows Metropolis alienates all but the occasional drunk cinephile who can understand French subtitles, and things gradually grind to a halt. By the time we leave, the dummy Ralf's flies are undone, and the dummy Florian's strides are round his ankles. The effect is, to say the least, amusing.

MERGER SHATTER AND SCATTER

CONFLICT AND CONFUSION surround British reggae group Merger following an announcement by one of the group's founding members, Winston Bennett, that he intends to take a new group calling itself Merger on the road in Britain.

The original group's other two founders — Barry Ford and Ivor Steadman — are claiming that Bennett has no right to call his band Merger, and that the real Merger are currently in Jamaica recording their next album.

Merger attracted considerable attention last year with their debut album "Exiles In A Babylon" on their own Sunstar Records, and with their exciting live appearances. Though the group was broadly reggae based, its aim was, as the name suggests, to fuse together elements of reggae, soul, rock and also into a (hopefully) new and cohesive whole.

It was the original trio of Ford, Steadman and Bennett who recorded the "Exiles" album, with Mike Durane producing and some assistance from outside musicians. The majority of the songs on the album were jointly credited to all three musicians and sung by Barry Ford, though the other two men also took lead duties on some songs.

Problems seem to have begun when the group went on the road, the three-piece being augmented by Michael and Tony Ozy, on drums and keyboards respectively. This line-up played a number of UK gigs before touring Holland earlier this year, whereupon they ceased live work.

It should be noted at this point that apart from such talent as the band possessed, one of the undoubted reasons for Merger's success was the tireless work of their hard-talking, bluff public relations man John Maxwell and his assistant Olga Graham. In fact, one noted reggae commentator went so far as to assert that the "real star" of the whole Merger operation was the brash personality of Maxwell, a noted hustler and stalwart of the 'alternative' Ladbroke Grove scene since the late '60s.

Maxwell claims that after the Holland tour Winston Bennett was sacked from the group. "We told him that if he didn't shape up he was out, and he didn't shape up."

Maxwell seemed particularly incensed by an incident in Amsterdam's Paradiso Club where, following an extensive encore jam, Bennett had filled in a full in the proceedings with the "daylight come and me wanna go home" riff from "The Banana Boat Song", a 1950s West Indian Calypso pop hit.

Maxwell also claimed at the time Ford and Steadman had gone to Jamaica, where they teamed up with keyboardist Tony Cole to work on Merger's next album, having become disenchanted with live work in the UK following the recent upsurge in criminal racist activities and an irksome brush with the police after a Nottingham gig.

When Thrills contacted Bennett in London last week, however, he asserted that "only Ivor (Steadman) has been in Jamaica. He left the group to go there. Barry Ford's been here all the time until he left last week to go to New York and then Jamaica. He wasn't interested in working here and we were."

Bennett's claim to the title of Merger is based on two counts. Firstly, because "I was the one who formed the band and who got involved at the outset." Secondly, the Ozy brothers are currently with him in the new Merger: "Mick and Tony have been on the road right from the start."

But they didn't play on the album.

"I wouldn't say that, Tony did."

Maxwell, however, claims that Barry Ford (ex-Clancy) is and always has been the driving force behind Merger, and certainly Maxwell's publicity has always been pitched that way.

under Bennett's leadership is completed by Ever Wilkington on bass, and Ras Danjuma on guitar (formerly Robin Campbell). Both were formerly with trombonist Rico.

Bennett also claims that at the present time John Maxwell was "stopping us from working". He told us that his Merger had been booked to play the 100 Club on May 4, but that the gig had subsequently been blown out following pressure exerted by Maxwell. He also said that Maxwell had threatened him with a court injunction on the name Merger and that he was "waiting to hear from Maxwell's solicitors" before proceeding with the group. But "as far as we're concerned, Merger is in Britain and willing and eager to work."

For his part, Maxwell denied to Thrills that he was stopping Bennett's band from working. "I'm just stopping them from imitating Merger," he said. "Because they're not Merger. They're Winston Bennett's Natural Ricos. The whole idea of Merger was what the name suggests, a fusion. Winston wants to play nationalistic — i.e. Jamaican — music."

Asked whether he would in fact be pressing for an injunction to stop Bennett's group using the name, he replied, "That's a terrible bourgeois bullshit thing to do. How can you get justice in an unjust court?" He did, however, affirm that his solicitor was sending Bennett a letter.

Then what would the Ford/Steadman group be called?

"They'll probably go out as Barry Ford Merger."

In the meantime Sunstar Records, with whom Bennett's Merger are affiliated, will be putting out a Merger single soon — formerly planned to be "Waterfall" from the album, though since Bennett wrote that number alone, plans may have been changed. And Steadman, Ford and Cole are certainly all in Jamaica and working on their next album for Sunstar, with Pam Nestor apparently helping out on backing vocals.

At the time of writing, Maxwell was due to be flying to Nigeria to set up a gig for 'Barry Ford Merger' there as supporting act to Nigerian roots star Fela Ransome Kuti. There seems to be a growing market for reggae in West Africa, with Merger's "Exiles In A Babylon" album apparently selling 60,000 copies there, while the last Virgin U Roy album allegedly has sales figures exceeding 200,000: one reason why British record companies may be keen to sign up reggae acts these days.

NIK TURNER

"SEVEN YEARS AGO Nik Turner could not play and was not understood. This did not stop him from becoming a founder member of Hawkwind," runs the runic inscription in Music Week, and balances this depressing debit with a statement so rich in occult reverberation that it stands yet between me and my sleep.

"Seven years and a pyramid later Nik Turner has joined together with another bunch of record selling hippies to make an album you still will not understand."

Pausing only to slip into my Egyptologist's jodhpurs and the sunbaked kepi with the hankie in back, I poled upstream through the colourful hordes of tourist merchants or 'promo hustlers' of Wardour Street to the traveller's lair. Nik Turner received me with a firmly secular handshake, which belied the other-worldly translucent quality of his pale eyes.

This man, one sensed, had drawn the veil, and beneath the hankie I felt my hackles rise and fall like — yes! — like miniature ancient civilisations.

Once we were seated, he launched into a tale which spanned continents and aeons with the ease of an astral drop-handlebar bicycle, so that one had no sooner put paid to the clouds of Nubian bluebottles with one's whisk, than one was snorkeling about on Atlantis. Leaving Hawkwind — "I was sacked, actually," he laughed — Nik set off for Egypt, resolved upon spending a night in the Great Pyramid.

"I got ripped off as soon as I got off the plane," he chortled, with a merriment that made one wonder whether a sunhat had been part of his accoutrement. Self-styled guides and guards flung themselves in his path uttering the age-old entreaty, "Baksheesh! Baksheesh!" Only by climbing to the top of the 482-foot pile and perching on the pinnacle was he able to rise above the ruck and spawn of commerce, and he hauled out his flute for a tootle.

"It was a really nice buzz."

"But did the pyramid improve your Cheops — sorry — chops?" I asked him.

He stroked his sparse beard. "I think so, but I can't say. My mind and intuition improved. I suppose I've had a lot of adverse criticism of my playing in the past, but I don't care because everybody's entitled to their own opinion."

Artist and horse. The artist is wearing the hat.

"But — but — there must be something in it?" I cried. "It's in Music Week!"

Nik's eyes seemed to drift clear like blue blimps. "It's all true, this business about sharpening razor blades and mummifying meat after 21 days."

"The pyramid is like a focal energy accumulator. Nobody really knows what the Great Pyramid was for. It is said that it was a tomb — but no body was ever found in it. There were some people who forced an entry into it with fire and vinegar in the 13th Century, and the entrance they created looks like the shape of a human form. It's amazing! Viewed from a distance, it looks like a human spirit superimposed on the side of the pyramid!"

Approaches to the Director of Antiquities resulted in permission for Nik to record inside the King's Chamber. The first attempt was spoiled by a hum on the tape caused by the strip lighting, but the second take, cut in total darkness, proved a wig-bender.

REUNION

"AN ANNOUNCEMENT of International Musical Significance" it said on the invite. I couldn't wait.

The worst kept secret on Tyneside and the only thing that had me wondering was the significance of the venue: the private club at Newcastle race course.

You may remember Lindisfarne, an extremely popular combo from the early '70s who dissolved, rather messily, in 1973. Well, the memory lingers on and, due in part to the unprecedented response to reunion concerts at Xmas, the bands are back together permanently.

Phonogram's marketing manager ("I was born and bred round here") addressed the assembled host of journalists and liggers. Telling us how pleased he was that Lindisfarne — authors of such hits as "Eleanor" (sic) — were back together, he carefully built up to the moment when they entered.

"Getting back together seemed the natural thing to do," enlarged Alan Hull. When you consider how spectacularly unsuccessful Hull has been since the original split, first with Lindisfarne Mk II and more recently with Radiator, you may well wonder at these 'natural' motives. Ditto the rest of the band, who have spent the last five years proving that sum about parts and wholes.

Afterwards Ray Jackson told Thrills that The Eagles may be the closest indication of where Lindisfarne are at now. Mention of Fleetwood Mac was met with derision by the normally generous Mr Jackson. Anyway, you'll soon have the chance to judge for yourselves. Lindisfarne set out on a thirty gig tour of Britain this week and have an album of new material released in June.

Oh yes, and there was a film of them performing their new single "Run For Home" on the telly tonight — they were filmed on a rooftop in the middle of Newcastle. When you think back to the last band that did that, it's not a good omen. Good luck lads, you'll need it.

● From Atlantis (page 16).

"I was sitting on the sarcophagus playing the flute and thinking how nice the sound was, when it suddenly came to me that the Egyptian Book Of The Dead was a manual textbook for using the Great Pyramid as a means for inter-dimensional travel!"

"Not a book to curl up with certainly," I conceded.

Nik outlined the scope. Triads of Gods, Horus, Isis, Thoth, Osiris, I-m-hetep, Set, Ptah, went into their sideways number, chomping each other up, re-assembling, and resurrecting in a riot of necrophilia and bad feeling, while — a mere warp away — a Venetian entity is strangely drawn towards a looming triangular edifice. Now read on "Well, anyway, I've tried to represent all that musically," he explained. "It's not just a funerary papyrus in the Egyptological sense — I should hope NOT!" I laughingly averred.

"... but also a projection of time and space-travel. The last track on the album is called 'God Rock', and it's like a vision of someone waking up inside the Great Pyramid and thinking, 'Fucking Hell! Where am I?' " Nik waved a banded arm. "Then of course there's the spells and judgements, like Thoth seeing if the heart is heavier than the Feather of Truth, and throwing it to this crocodile-headed monster."

Clearly one of the more labyrinthine scenarios, and one which, as the advert predicted, I did not understand. Stumped, I turned from the meandering oracle to the booklet which accompanies the album, "Xitintoday". A couple of personnel curiosities. — Massed Bongos of Atlantis. Knocks — Sarcophagus. King's Chamber — put the Turner enterprise a unicorn-horn ahead of previous pyramid outings by Paul Horn and Sun Ra, and some of the verse buggars description: "Am I still on Venus, though this does not feel Atlantis. Have I been asleep, is this part a Fantasy?"

It remains only to alert the curious to Nik Turner's Bohemian Love-In at the Lyceum in June, with free-eaters, poets, light-shows and mime, and sundry materialisations at the Windscale Rally on April 29, and the Festival Of Mind & Body at Olympia in May. All performances will be free; one up for hippy credibility.

THE NAME, RIPE WITH B-feature gangster movie overtones, comes from a chapter title of William Burroughs' Soft Machine. The band, their music also ripe with overtones but of a more serious kind, chose it for no reason other than liking the sound of the words.

They come from Hull. Since last July, though, they've been living in the smoke. Right around the corner from the Rochester Castle in Stoke Newington, where their regular Saturday night sets have been a staple of the capital's pig lists, gaining them a generous hard core following.

Dead Fingers Talk say they owe the place a big debt, for when other venues had barred their doors due to their first manager's, er, unreliability, the Rochester put their money where their faith was, offering incentive and encouragement.

But then the Rochester isn't exactly a favoured haunt of media hawks, whose capricious attention can sometimes make the difference between instant fame and abject limbo. Somewhere between those two poles, though nearer the latter than the former, is where DFT have been since they came to town.

Which has its good and bad points. On the one hand it can test your strength, sort out the jokers and toughen your resolve. On the other hand, it can mean back-breaking frustration. They've had their share of frustration both in seeing their ideas given the red carpet treatment in the hands of others, and in basic economic exigencies like not being able to afford equipment to further musical development.

Their ideas — the song subjects and particularly the forceful ways they are presented by frontman Bobo Phoenix — should have been a one-way first class ticket in the social-angst-conscious climate of last year.

Bobo, once seen, is unforgettable. He wears oversized jackets that hang awkwardly on his spider frame, and does an odd little angular walk dance that makes him look like a Max Wall marionette.

His words, like those of Tom Robinson or Jimmy Pursey, tackle modern day diseases. The vocabulary is sometimes a bit too thick and tangled, but his message is exact. "Harry", for instance, deals with the problem of gay resentment in viciously evocative terms.

Bobo acts the part of the queer-basher in a psycho parody based on his experience during a six month stay at one of Her Majesty's Holiday Camps — where he found himself after a short-lived career as a burglar — in a way that has been known to scare an audience half out of its wits.

"Harry, now," he explained when we met at a recording studio hiding behind the suburban facade of a quiet Thames backwater, "is about the fact that we're all the same so why don't we just stop messing around, instead of all this 'you're a queer and you're a Jew and you're a nigger'. I'm a great believer in everybody just getting along with each other, but instead of putting it down in a sentimental fashion, like 'people got to love each other', I thought I'd put it across in a really powerful way."

It affected, for one, Tom Robinson, who freely admits that he was inspired to drop the "discreet performance" of Cafe Society for the upfront tactics of the TRB by Bobo's onstage ferocity. Asked how this approach came about though, Bobo is decidedly vague.

"Insanity..." he offers. "Neuroses that I had built up over the years. I've been doing it like that since we started without really thinking about it. I've always" — he adds drily — "been a good dancer."

The seven years he spent on the dole must have given him lots of time to practise. And as for neuroses... a Christian Science fanatic trying to resolve uncertain sexual habits and a life of crime with Sunday School, wood carving and early Velvet Underground records must have had plenty to work with.

Not to mention Dead Fingers Talk — as yet unknown by that name — whose seeds were sown eight years ago when guitarist Geoff Parsons, then in his mid-teens, put an ad in a local paper and through it met the equally young Bobo and drummer Tony Carter. They played their first gig the day after they met. They have been, despite some long periods of inactivity, banging their heads against the wall ever since.

To wit: the assault began in '76. By '77 they were, according to Geoff, "County Durham's top band. They thought we were the best thing they'd ever seen up there."

"Yeah," cracks Tony, "And we'd have been even better if we'd had longer hair."

Geoff: "We used to go down an absolute storm everywhere we played. Because there was such a good buzz from the audience we had a strong period, playing real tight."

Tony: "But then you start to realise that you're doing all these great gigs but you're still not getting the press, not the A & R men, because you're out of London."

So they moved to London.

However, life, as mentioned earlier, did not prove to be a barrel of roses, and crisis point was reached some six weeks ago at the Music Machine.

Bobo had been ill and homeless since Christmas, and was considering leaving the band. They should have been at the peak of their energies, having just signed with Pye Records, but instead were ragged and sloppy, their performance heartless in the face of a motley crowd of Monday night pos sitting on the ground for skirt.

Yet, inevitably, the after effect of that debacle was some hellish soul searching to find out why the sheer drive and pressure had dwindled. One assumes they found the answers, because the ensuing three weeks of intensive rehearsals gave them seven new songs and inspiration for their first album — currently in production with another Hull lad, Mick Ronson, at the helm.

What went wrong and why is it going right again now?

Tony: "Before, we were rushing around like mad. We couldn't afford rehearsals, we rushed our act together. It wasn't until recently that we've really had the time to think about the music instead of all the hassles of running a band."

Geoff: "Before, somebody would have a song and we'd just bash it out. Now we don't play as much within a song, like I'll play quieter for a few bars to let the vocals come across."

Bobo sums it up: "We've increased our communication level dramatically. The songs we do now have a lot more content, and more texture. We used to have a lot of songs that were just here and gone — basic tap-your-foot rock songs — now we've moved away from all that."

"Our music right now," he continues, "what I see '78 as, is strength. Still the strength of the punk thing, but we want to bring more sensitivity into the music, more thought and reason. There seemed to be a lot of insensitivity about last year to me. Everybody was just tearing things down. It's easy to tear things down, but it's not so easy to create something to put in its place."

Dead Fingers Talk, like TRB, are about social commitment aligned to rock music. Almost too common place as bedfellows these days, but bear in mind that DFT have had a message to tell for a long time, certainly before such things became chic.

And if that sits awkwardly with their intention to release a blatantly commercial first single, then remember also that it didn't do Tom Robinson any harm.

THE EXISTENCE of a creature similar to the legendary abominable snowman has been reported by villagers in the remote wastes of North Eastern Siberia.

They call it "chuchunna", meaning fugitive or outcast, and it is described as a thin shaggy figure with a dark face, dressed in reindeer skins, with arms that reach below its knees. Usually spotted at dawn or dusk, the chuchunna utters shrill cries, eats raw meat and sometimes steals food from houses.

Sceptics dismiss the claims, but one Soviet scientist, Dr Semyon Nikolyev, says: "Descriptions by witnesses coincide in too many details of the chuchunna's appearance, manners and behaviour."

One theory is that the chuchunna is the remnant of Siberia's Stone Age people, who have gradually been retreating from civilisation for centuries. Another is that it's the new Ramone...

WHY DO ALL THESE AMERICAN KIDS STILL GET OFF . . .

PHIL COLLINS of Genesis takes his duties as singer, drummer, and compere pretty much in his stride. It's just that before a gig he can't sit still.

In the band's dressing room in Chicago, Phil runs on the spot, shadow boxes, tap dances, sings "Oh For The Wings Of A Dove" in a gross soprano, practices his drumming on table tops, does impersonations of Tommy Cooper and Eddie Waring, and offers help to all who seek it.

When guitarist Mike Rutherford can't find his gym shoes, Phil rummages in his duffel and finds them. When a visiting hack can't find the rest room, Phil provides directions. "Piss on the floor if you want to, maan," he says. "We're a rock band, maan."

Genesis take the stage at eight sharp, but by then the Phil Collins variety show is already well under way.

THIS FOUR week American tour is very important for Genesis. They've got a new stage act, with selections from their new album of pop songs. And a new guitarist, Daryl Stuermer, to replace Steve Hackett.

Not that changes of key personnel matter much to American fans. After Stuermer takes a solo early in the set, a kid shouts at him: "Awright, Steeve!"

"Maybe he thought Steve had curled his hair and gotten a moustache," says Daryl. "Oh well . . ."

In ten years time, when Chester Thompson and Daryl are the only remaining members of the present Genesis line-up, the band will no doubt be packing out even bigger stadiums and selling even more product than now.

Of course, Chester will have taken over as lead vocalist by then, with Daryl doing all the lead work. The rest of the guys will be a pick-up band. Possibly Dave Greenfield (keyboards), Colin Moulding (bass) and Chris Miller (drums). Or something like that.

Whatever the line-up, Genesis will still be offering the same mixture of ornate melodies and baroque lyrics. A little bit of English eccentricity, but nothing that would alarm Mom and Dad.

It's a weird paradox. Where others flounder with the loss of their mainmen, Genesis seem to go from strength to strength. Their fans have an unusually deferential attitude. It's as though mere membership of the band is enough to bestow authority upon the musicians, whatever their new roles and regardless of past loyalties.

That makes Genesis something of an institution. It's not the individuals that count, it's the continued existence of the dynasty. A bit like the Royal Family, in a way.

How does Phil Collins explain it? "I think the fact that Pete (Gabriel) and Steve have left is coincidental. I think the band gets better anyway. It's the way we affect people. Once you get into the music, it stays with you."

And that's why we've always attracted a fanatical cult."

Phil thinks the strength of Genesis lies with what he calls "the oddness" of people in the band.

"I'm pretty normal, right?" (This is intended to be a rhetorical question).

"But Tony (Banks) and Mike are not the normal kind of people you find in bands, and neither were Peter and Steve."

For example, Tony is basically a writer. He's in the band because we play his songs. If Genesis finally split up, you wouldn't find Tony joining anyone else."

Mike Rutherford's the one who's responsible for lead guitar in the studio now that Hackett's gone. What's his view of the band's ability to survive?

He thinks that not much has changed. "Both Steve and I played lead guitar in the past," he says. "I was the only guitarist on the new album, but onstage Daryl and I both play guitar."

Broadly speaking, Daryl plays lead on the old songs, and I play lead on the new ones. Though it's not really as simple as that. But then it really never is."

If you thought Genesis were an intellectual cult band, then you never saw them play the Stadium in Chicago. The band may still sound the way Yes would if Jon Anderson was replaced by Dave Cousins, but to be a Genesis fan the minimum qualifications are no longer Ph.D.s in Music and Greek Literature. All you need to be is 14, American, and the owner of an eight dollar ticket.

As Collins puts it: "If they weren't seeing Genesis, they'd be in the back seat at a drive-in screwing their old woman. You know?"

Quite what all these 14 year old back-seat plungers make of some of the more esoteric moments of the Genesis set is none too clear. Basically, the 15,000 kids at Chicago cheer the old songs, the lasers, the drum solos, and the bits that sound like parade music. Otherwise, they're a little uneasy. Intellectual adventure is okay, if you've been there before.

As if in response to their new following, the latest Genesis album, "And Then There Were Three", is their most accessible to date. Short tunes with words you can understand without recourse to the dictionary.

But then surely that was the point about Genesis. Nobody really understood what they were on about. The pleasure came from the intellectual kudos you got from carrying their albums about the campus.

"I'm quite prepared to believe that we did avoid writing simple songs at the start," says Phil Collins. "With the first four or five albums, we had a kind of self-righteous thing that it had to be tricky, beyond everybody's grasp, clever-clever."

But isn't that a major part of the band's appeal for some people?

"For some people. But others prefer things like 'Los Endos' that I was more involved with. Our appeal is in different areas."

WELL, HE may be right. But at Chicago the kids didn't really take to the new stuff. "Follow You, Follow Me" was a total bummer, though the band insist it'll go better in Europe. Thin, wispy melodies like "The Lady Lies", "Say It's Alright Joe", and "Down And Out" also slacken the pace of the set. Only "Deep In The Motherlode" really takes off, and that's because it's a simple, ponderous riff, not too far removed in places from the staple heavy metal diet of the American rock circuit.

Of course, Genesis get their encore, complete with the massed cigarette lighters routine. But it's two hours into their marathon set before a substantial portion of the crowd get to their feet. And that can seem like a long time, believe me.

Phil Collins denies that there's been a change of musical policy. The new album may have more songs and simpler melodies than usual, but he says it wasn't an attempt to be more commercial.

"It was just an experiment — which I think succeeded. But it doesn't set a precedent. Next time we may do a double album — with one long work on a particular theme — like 'The Lamb Lies Down On Broadway.' It depends how we feel at the time."

Was the "experiment" influenced by the New Wave's success in moving away from long-winded instrumentals?

"No," says Phil Collins. "It was just a coincidence that we decided to do a lot of songs."

"Incidentally, did you know that Nick Lowe auditioned to be lead singer when Peter left? We had his pictures and his bio in the rehearsal room, and the NME carried a news item about it. Amazing, really. I think he's very good. But lead singer with us? I bet the thought would really make him freak out now."

It's in Chicago that a strange lapse of judgement is evident on stage.

Phil Collins does a number of comic monologues to introduce songs, a bit like an East End patter merchant on the back of a lorry, and in one of these monologues, he starts going on about women's tits. How they droop when women get older.

Using the twee euphemism "bumps", he says "women's bumps sag right down to their waists."

The point of this is to introduce a song called "Ripples" (not "Nipples"). But the "joke" seems not only offensive, and somewhat tactless in a country where feminist attitudes are so strong. When I point this out to Collins later, he seems surprised.

"Well," he says, "I think humour is a good part of our thing. 'Ripples' just happens to be a song about the passing of time, and the people never look the same again."

Yes, but why pick on women? Men grow uglier, too. In response, Collins says something very weird.

"Right," he says, "But it's funnier if a woman grows uglier."

This statement is obviously so bizarre, that it seemed almost unkind to pursue it.

Collins continues: "The thing is we're relating to the drive-in crowd. To me it's what's natural. It's my kind of humour. I view everything from a Monty Python point of view."

I say I noticed his funny walks on stage.

He says: "I'm quite prepared to believe that what I do is awkward. But I'm still discovering. Each show is a major growth for me. I'm happy with what I do now. But perhaps I'll look back in two months time and say 'Christ, I was a real geek when I did that!'"

Later, a member of the band's entourage says: "I don't know why Mike and Tony let Phil do those routines on stage. They just don't go with the music, do they?"

But Tony Banks, for one, is not unhappy. En route to the next gig in Cleveland, he talks with evident fond amusement of the kids' response to Phil Collins' performance. "It's strange what they laugh at," he says. "The things you find funny don't amuse them, and the other way round. You never know."

TRUTH, Phil Collins is a very able front man, clearly holding the entire act together, scampering between his front-stage mike and his battery of percussion instruments on the plinth behind. He's clearly the main focus of attention, and it's only the shortcomings of the heavily unionised spotlight operators that prevent him from hogging the show.

At the Cleveland Coliseum, the band play to 18,000 kids. Like Chicago, it's been a Genesis stronghold in the past. The show sold out in two hours, and there was a riot at the box office, with 30 people taken to hospital.

Having resorted to civil disorder to get here, the kids are naturally enthusiastic about having made it. The response is far stronger than in Chicago.

Daryl Stuermer, in particular, really asserts himself. The suspicion is that he's a more accomplished guitarist than Hackett, though perhaps less individual.

Once again, golden oldies go better than the new stuff. The elegant melody of "One For The Vine" is a standout, but the kids foam instead over the more pedestrian "Squonk".

Several times, though, the goodwill created by the familiar songs is dissipated by the newcomers. It's as though the band are deliberately squandering the audience's enthusiasm.

Afterwards, Mike Rutherford admits there are flat bits in the set, but says it's done on purpose. "We couldn't go on flat out all night," he says. "We need something in reserve for the last few songs. If we were playing what we call our festival set, we would do all our strongest material. But that's a different sort of occasion."

Obviously, Rutherford must know his business. The band have built up their American following over the course of six years' touring. Initially, it represented a huge investment. But in the past 18 months, they've moved into profit. And that's on a big scale — though no one in the band actually says so.

One informed source put the nightly net takings at about 50,000 dollars. If that's true, it works out at a million dollars profit for every 20 gigs. Not bad for a former college cult.

ANOTHER MUSIC FOR A DIFFERENT LOFT

Altman BLACK ARTHUR BLYTHE weighs into the Big Apple for California, tells ours man how, why, and when. By BRIAN CASE.

NEW YORK, like London, sucks the talent from the regions, and some disappear down the plughole while others secure a purchase in the firmament. Most of Chicago's AACM and St. Louis Black Artists Group have relocated and established a reputation in that grudging city.

For some reason, nobody ever thinks of California which too has rendered up its hottest sons. Writer-drummer Stanley Crouch comes from there, so do the incandescent saxophonists David Murray and Black Arthur Blythe.

First the name. Anyone extrapolating some kinda scary racistist appatchik from Black Arthur's prefix can forget it. Built like the late Cannonball Adderley, bearded avuncular chuckling, Black Arthur may be proud of his heritage, but he ain't about to dish out the old armpit to the paler races.

"Some friends gave me that name," he explains. "One night we were all together and socializing, and I'd been doing some reading on black musical history. I think I was reading something about Scott Joplin at the time, and I was just so enthusiastic and elated about what I'd read that I was telling my friends, 'Look at what I found! I was just bending their ear, and they said, 'Well man—please give us a break—that's fine, but give our ears a break, you know. Here comes Black Arthur giving us that Black Talk again!'"

"I was expressing racial pride—but not hostility towards other ethnic peoples. They put the Black on me, and it sorta stuck. That was about 15 or 16 years ago. Then the press got it, and I thought, well—if that's it, that's it. You get it."

He sits on the hotel bed and guffaws, old T-shirt, jeans, forearms big as bolsters. He's got quite a reputation as an altman. Village Voice: "Blythe and Murray tower over the Loft Underground"; Chico Hamilton rates him the finest alto since Dolphy, and Stanley Crouch puts him second only to Ornette.

"David Murray told me you'd been an influence on him," I report. Black Arthur is modest. "Well, maybe in the sense of someone he listens to sometimes. We might sit down and talk about something, but David, he's a fine musician himself. I don't wanna claim I taught him in that sense, because I really haven't, but I've maybe inspired him to seek certain areas for himself. Maybe ..."

Stanley Crouch had been teaching at Pomona College with a bunch of the cats like Black Arthur, Bobby Bradford, Charles Tyler, Butch Morris and Walter Lowe in attendance, when David Murray was deciding on a college: some curriculum.

"Do you think the rise of Black Studies in the colleges reflects government panic after the riots?" I ask.

"It might have been some of that. It was like a pressure valve move, keep people cooled down a little bit. That period has passed now. There's not that type of tension no more concerning the black white situation. It might be more like a peaceful co-existence now. We have to live with one another, so let's try to deal with it the best way we can."

"Even at the time of the riots my personal attitude was that the music was Black Music in the sense that I'm a black person making it, but the music was for everybody. It was for all peoples of the world. It wasn't for like an elite group of people—one of our objectives was to share it, man."

Along with Horace Tapscott—LA's answer to Muhal Richard Abrams in Chicago—Everett Brown, David Bryant, Lester Robertson and Walter Savage, Black Arthur was a founder-member of Southern California's UGMA—Underground Musicians Association. Like the AACM, the organisation aimed at combining the contributions of the past with the present, and spreading the word through teaching in the colleges.

The jazz scene had receded since the storming Central Avenue days in the '40s—The Brown Bomber, The Bird In The Basket, Papa Lovejoy's, The Downbeat, The Last Word, The Jumble Room, Billy Berg's—and ebbed even further with the extinction of the white West Coast movement. The New Wave saw a resurgence with Dolphy, Ornette, Bobby Bradford and John Carter active in the LA area.

"Things have changed since Dexter's day, because the colour line was more imposed then," Black Arthur explains. "Nowadays we can get into the system a little bit more, expand—and the culture has suffered a little bit."

"See, we had an area we had to stay in—like Central Avenue—and when we expanded out, our thing got diluted. When the history was happening heavy, the post-war period, the money was flowing in a different kind of manner and it made Central Avenue activities feasible."

to cut a second album with fellow UGMA member Azar Lawrence, who was with McCoy Tyner. He'd played an astonishing solo on "Warriors Of Peace" from "Bridge Into The New Age", and Azar wanted him to move to New York for the next album.

"I had eyes for going to New York myself anyway, and this gave me a reason and the money to do so. The record never did manifest, but I got hooked up in another situation. It was my first time in New York. I had a friend where I could go lay and stay for a minute to get my bearings, see how I could manoeuvre in the city, my best way to survive, you know. I got me a little day job at 150 dollars a week, and then went back and got my family."

"I'd worked with Charles Tyler's group, he gave me a couple little hits every now and then, what he could stand, you know. I was working with Leon Thomas for three or four months, and then I was hitting and missing. I was only able to stick in there because I'd saved up a little money prior to moving to New York. Well, I got a call from Chico Hamilton who like needed a horn player, and I worked with Chico for the next three years."

Chico's band has changed up since the old swinging cello days, and he now fields alto and a couple guitars. Black Arthur still plays with him, as well as playing in the Gil Evans Orchestra and heading his own unit.

"I'm trying to balance it all out. I don't know what category to put Chico in. He might do a rockish kinda thing, and then we might get heavy off into the tradition and I'll do 'Sentimental Mood'. He's open. He has his own ideas about continuity, and I try to play within his setting. He gives me room. I can play personal within his perimeter. I'm learning from Chico and Gil. Chico has made me aware of presentation—how to create a flow from Point A to Point B over a set—type of music to start with, type to end with."

What was it like playing with Gil Evans?

"Everybody in the band is a soloist, man. In Chico's band I be the major soloist, but here I'm just one of them, and I've gotta take my turn. Gil isn't like a hard-driving bandmaster. He gives you some music, shows you what he wants you to do with it, but he leaves a large responsibility on the individual player to get it together."

"You know if you're not doing your job, and so do your constituents round you, so Gil don't put a lotta pressure like 'You missed a B flat 7th' He lets you work it out with yourself. I've been with him a year and a half, so I'm familiar with his book."

I had wondered whether Black Arthur's debut album, "The Grip", owed anything to Gil Evans' sense of tones and textures. One of the most sensitively varied and unusually instrumented musical programmes of recent years, "The Grip" is a triumph of imagination.

"In using instruments like the tuba, the conga and the cello, I have tried to tie together elements from the entire range and history of the music," writes the leader. "My purpose in formulating this particular instrumentation is to rekindle old thoughts and feelings with modern ones."

"Prior to getting into Gil's band I had aspirations about using the tuba," says Black Arthur. "When I got in the band I met Bob Stewart and that made the availability. I met the cellist, Abdul Wadud, on Julius Hemphill's album, 'Coon Bid'ness', and I'd known the conga player, Muhammad Abdullah, from California. So, the elements were present, and when the opportunity to record came up, I said Lemme JUMP on it!"

"When a musician has the freedom, I think of that as freedom of choice, rather than to omit or disregard the structure and groundrules that were laid out. My thought about freedom is to increase my vocabulary, to have the choice to extract from the past what I wanna use. I try to play a variety. Throughout the day, the emotions of an individual, they vary. You don't stay GRRRR or happy all the time. It fluctuates. I hope the listener digs what I dig, and I use a little spice to keep him in tune with me. Sometimes it doesn't work, and you be off a little bit. I still be learning."

Unlike most of the New Music, Black Arthur's is irreducibly simple and melodic. His sound is huge and declarative, and although his technique is phenomenal, he subordinates it in favour of emotional impact. The musician's spirit comes across above all else.

"I've been basically sounding like that all along. You know, like a diamond is a diamond in the rough or the polished, and I think about it like I'm constantly polishing it, but it's gonna be the same shape. It wants to keep going on, up and out — as long as life is going, you know. Let's see how much of a shine..."

"I first got a saxophone at nine. I wanted a trombone because I'd heard a player with a blues band, and it fascinated me how he could do that sound — WHAA-WHAA. I told my mother that's what I wanted, but at that time she was in tune with music like Johnny Hodges, Tab Smith and Earl Bostic. She wasn't a musician, but she used to sing around the house."

"Later on when I started to get more involved, I got in tune with Thelonious Monk — my first major influence — and she'd be listening to the records. I'd say, 'WOW! — Ma's OK, you know. Well, she got me the alto, and back then Earl Bostic's 'Sleep' was one of my records. I thought that was really happening."

"Time went on, and some of my peers were influential. I remember a tenor player in San Diego named Daniel Jackson, fine player. He knew a lot about the ethnic character of music, how it was supposed to sound, little inflections just like in your culture there are little ethnic inflections that make it what it is. He gave me a direction. Also during my teens, I had an alto teacher called Kurt Bradford who used to work with Jimmy Lunceford's band. So, I was getting input from many sources, many areas..."

"Melody — that be one of my thoughts. I look back at those alto players. I want to keep certain aspects of the culture alive, and try to add my present day feelings to that groundwork. I wanna build another room onto the house my forefathers laid out — not start another house over here by itself."

"Jesus!", said God.

"Jesus!", said God.

"Something bugging you?", retorted Gabriel from across the desk. God heaved a long sigh and gave his second-in-command and assistant programme controller one of those long lingering looks that had put the wind up lesser men. "I do wish you'd cease trying to talk like a musical journalist. It sounds awfully pretentious."

Gabriel was a trifle miffed but nevertheless took the hint and went back to cataloguing the new releases.

The Almighty meanwhile resumed his plodding through an enormous box of tee shirts, decorated mirrors, stickers, badges and assorted promotional paraphernalia that had just arrived at Radio Heaven from CBS. Reaching down into the bottom of the box he finally came up with two rather crumpled records, the dogeared sleeves of which he examined with disdain for a few seconds, stroking his grey beard ponderously before depositing them both in the waste bin unopened and unheard.

Reaching for his cigarettes and swinging his sandalled feet onto the desk top he blew a cursory smoke ring, picked his nose distractedly and mused. Musing was his wont at times of extreme frustration.

Gabriel scratched under his right wing and looked up at the omnipotent one.

"Go on. You can tell me. There's something buggi...er... bothering you. I can tell."

The Heavenly father decided to make a clean breast of it.

"Oh, I don't know. It's just that none of these records seem to give me the buzz they used to. There's nothing you can play nonstop for a week anymore. You remember those old Byrds albums and things like 'Beatles For Sale'. Those things were never off my deck for weeks. You could get excited. And now what is there? Devo! Don't make me laugh, it's so...so...unconvincing. No fun anymore. No fun." "Know what you mean boss", offered Gabriel, putting aside his felt tip and warming to the subject. "There's just got to be more to life than the next Wire album, hasn't there? I feel like I want to get into something with a more 'up' kind of feel to it. Something more positive."

There was a silence as both men nodded sagely.

At that moment the library door burst open to admit John the Baptist, Radio Heaven's Rock DJ, sporting a ripped Banshees tee shirt, a two thousand year growth on his chin and carrying a pile of Stranglers albums. Parting his shoulder length hair to reveal a grizzled and manic countenance, he peered round the room.

"Hi Jove! What's happening?"

"Not much", offered Gabriel. "all these new albums stink."

"Oh yeah! Well now it's a good job I came in when I did, 'cos have I got the platter to lay on you, to make you lose your blues and put on your rock and roll shoes and boogie all night long..."

At this God saw red.

"Now look, I told you what would happen if you tried to push one of those Mahogany Rush albums on me once more. The whole number...the locusts, the bolts of lightning, the boils, the sores, the graves opening...the full works. Got me?" "Naw", interjected the Baptist, "it's nothing like that. In fact it was Augustine who layed this one on me".

God and Gabriel exchanged quizzical glances. Augustine was the late night presenter and well known as the station wimp. How could his tastes and John the Baptist's converge? But they had. And the subject of this agreement was 'NEXT OF KIHN', the third and finest album from the extraordinary Greg Kihn Band, a masterpiece of dynamic tuneful and heartwarming rock and roll. God listened.

He dug it. Right now he's on this third copy, it's been top of Radio Heaven charts for weeks and all the opposition is considering retirement.

Now that he's got into it, everybody down here is going to need a good excuse to ignore the fact that the Greg Kihn Band are right at the top of their particular tree.

John Lee Hooker used to say 'Nothing but the best. Later for the garbage.' He could have been talking about 'NEXT OF KIHN'

SINGLES

SINGLE OF THE WEEK
TOM ROBINSON
BAND: Up Against The Wall (EMI). Not only the best single in the heap but, discounting the various album tracks being sprung on the public by bands marking time in the songwriting department, the only 45 here I would have spent money on.

Co-written by Roy Butterfield, original TRB guitarist, this doesn't just make it as a slice of social/political conscience (although it'll be nice to see TOTPs squirm). It's a catchy tune with a powerful hook, a perfect single with a hard rock edge. "Whirlhall, up against the wall..." "Don't be too sure."

NOW THE SINGLE OF THE ALBUM:

BLONDIE: (I'm Always Touched By Your Presence Dear (Chrysalis). Most of the other quality items are familiar territory; let's put out another track from the album so the punters don't forget our wunnerful hit combo. This isn't Blondie at their best but it's the obvious follow-up to "Dennis," another '70s Shangri-Las work-out. Inevitable hit but the group deserve it.

ELVIS COSTELLO: Pump It Up (Radar). The professor rests on his laurels. After "Detectives" and "Chelsea" a third consecutive masterpiece is hardly mandatory. You get an affable mid-tempo stomper, probably fine for a disco between funks, with Elvis sounding marginally less miserable than usual. Why the rush to chuck this at the charts? More dignified to wait a couple of months for new material.

RUBINOOS: Rock And Roll Is Dead (Berserker). Tongue-in-cheek heavy metal battery from their debut album. It's not typical of their lightweight pop approach and it's not their most commercial shot — but anything that can make Ted Nugent funny must be worthwhile.

XTC: This Is Pop? (Virgin). More polished version of the track from "White Music."

"What is that noise that you put on...?" It ought to be a successful noise, because it's more instant than "Statue Of Liberty" and not too clever for airplay.

999: Me And My Desire (United Artists). The third single from the first album? That's really stretching it; I've got a lot of time for 999 but they're developing a tendency to spray singles at their audience like free badges. This is respectable, efficient punk but so were the other singles and all three were better left as album tracks.

NEW ENOUGH WAVE TONIGHT: Money That's Your Problem (TDS).

Jabbering, shallow pop in the same vein as the unbearably sickly "Drummerman." Supertramp go bubblegum. It's clean-cut, wholesome young lads like this that give Southend a bad name.

THE STRANGLERS: Nice 'n' Sleazy (United Artists). Skipping the hit formula at last: greasy white reggae with bubbling bass line. Hugh Cornwell snarls earnestly; oh, isn't life tough, cruel world. Po-faced band of the week.

JOLT: Whatcha Gonna Do About It (Polydor). Beware, there is life on this record, a neat cover of the Small Faces' classic from a young Scottish band. Their own "Again And Again" on the B side is equally lively and only slightly less tuneful. Keep watching the grooves.

READYMADES: Terry Is A Space Cadet (Automatic). Unexpected off-the-wall genius from conglomerate of American punks (ex-Avengers, ex-Crime). This one's zany, (remember that word) on a Jonathan Richman level of charming inanity; a soft sci-fi, N.Y. Dolls at three-years-old, lost in space love song. Move over Troy Tempest.

THE WARM: Floosie EP (Warm). This is what garages were built for. A curious, obscure, cosmopolitan UK band have produced an EP so awful in conception and execution that it actually becomes enjoyable listening. This is a really dreadful two-chord trash for people with bizarre ear drums. I love it.

PORK DUKES: Telephone Masterbator (Wood). Try not to look at the cover. Pant, pant lavatory humour from people too old to know better. Monotonous destructive aural graffiti. The sort of record that makes you want to lose your dinner. Produced by Willie Dunnit. Ho, ho...

URCHIN: She's A Roller (DJM). Professional Vic Maile product but ultimately faceless music. Urchin are a distinctly long-haired pub band, and seem destined to remain such.

REDUCERS: Things Go Wrong (Vibes). They do indeed — like independent labels being formed for the aimless purpose of vomiting out this level of impenetrable kiddipunk.

VENUS & THE RAZORBLADES: Workin' Girl (Spark). More Kim Fowley robots. Dyan Diamond is this month's version of Cherie Currie, bleating trite West Coast pop.

THE TUBES: Show Me A Reason (A&M). There was I waiting to snigger when suddenly... nothing funny happened. Here the Tubes grasp for commercial credibility with a smoothie, Beatle-ish MOR crumb from the live album.

BOMBERS: I'm A Liar Babe (The Label). Inoffensive, aging punk (two beards and one baldie but hip shades) with a "Statue Of Liberty" riff. They've missed the bandwagon by about six months and nobody's got the heart to tell them.

WILLIE ALEXANDER AND THE BOOM BOOM BAND: You've Lost That Lovin' Feelin' (MCA). I thought this emaciated cult figure was supposed to be Boston's latest shoed bread substitute. I presume he's capable of more than a lacklustre grind through an over-familiar standard. Over-acted, over-bearing and overrated.

FRUIT EATING BEARS: Door In My Face (DJM). Once semi-cult pub rockers, now the first punks to try for Eurovision fame. This record is why they failed. Burn it.

CHRIS SEIVEY & THE FRESHIES: Baiser (Raz). Despite sub-Residents promo material this rivals The Warm in ghastliness but not in charm.

SCHOOL MEALS: Headmaster (Edible). I say, yes, the Head is a frightful chap, isn't he! Such angry young men.

BILBO BAGGINS: I Can Feel Mad (Lightning). Pleasant, brainless rubbish. The B side, "Doie Q Blues", displays either a ready wit or a complete absence of mental faculties.

STARSHIP: Vampire For Your Love (Scratch). Remember White Plains? This is almost the same group cowering behind new picture-sleeve-thin credibility, taking a Marc Bolan line and doing nothing with it.

PAUL SHUTTLEWORTH: Mixed Up, Shook Up Girl (Epic). The golden tonsils of the extinct and greatly missed Kursaal Flyers try a Willy DeVille ballad as a solo exercise. Nice idea but someone let Mike Batt into the studio with a big lush orchestra. It must be raining in Southend.

AKA: Heroes Are Losers (Vanity). Breathlessly sincere 12 inches of street pop. Aka fronts an unusual mixture of backing musicians (from Reggae Regular, Monochrome Set, Chelsea) and produces an intriguing reggae/softrock concoction with smart, sub-dub interjections but no real power. It's loose and messy but at least it's interesting.

THE REST
RED BALUNE: Capitalist Kid (MCCB). Music of the revolution, like Kraftwerk falling down a lift-shaft with somebody elses instruments.
RIFF REGAN: All The Nice Boys And Girls In The World (MCA). You could probably fit their names on a postage stamp. Anyway, how did this ugly fellow wangle a picture sleeve. Fab 208 fodder if he was prettier.

ROY HILL: George's Bar (Arista). Diluted calypso drive. It's all about having a few bevys, dancing in the streets. Do that round here and they call it drunk and disorderly.

HELEN SCHNEIDER: Until Now (Windson). One for enquiring pensioners.

FERGUS: Blue-Eyed Boy (Rendezvous). An Irish Andy Fairweather-Lowe. Cheerful and harmless in a small, round, black sort of way.

DOLPHIN: Loda Lovelace (Private Stock). C'mon down to the disco, you can flap your baggies to this one. It's not a heavy breathing number, just dull, half-hearted, funk.

TERRA COTTA: EP (Terra Cotta). Grossly old-fashioned, slushy excuse for rock. Easy listening that's not even hip.

DHAMA: Ius Jah Children (Lightning). Commercial, crossover reggae in the Althia and Donna mould.

Unobtrusively tuneful with a fairly predictable dub side.

SMOKEY ROBINSON (Madam X (Motown)). I remember him. I think.

DENEICE WILLIAMS: Season (CBS). Infectious but totally clinical MOR soul. She's a good vocalist but so are a million others. The B side's got the dafiest title since "The Whiffenpoof Song" — "God, Is Amazing". Course he is, after all, he's God, ain't he. No point having a mediocre God.

MARSEILLES: The French Way (Mountain). After the exhaustive, hot breath advertising campaign comes the limp, repetitive anti-climax of heavy metal, failed machismo tripe.

STEVE GIBBONS BAND: Eddy Vortex (Polydor). Archetypal Gubbins, with drawing confused lyrics — possibly designed to ingratiate his band with any currently fashionable arena of musical taste — over a cop from "Summertime Blues." Top ten.

KRIS KRISTOFFERSON AND RITA COOLIDGE: I Fought The Law (A&M). It's painful to admit but this is fairly unobjectionable. An old Sonny Curtis song — but a version which suggests these American stars of screen and cabaret were actually wide awake when they recorded it.

HERBIE FLOWERS: Don't Take My Bass Away (EMI). Yes, leave his bass alone. Just grab the mike and stop him trying to sing.

FIVE HAND REEL: Pinch Of Snuff (RCA). Hey-nony-no with stringed things.

RESURRECTIONS
PETER COOK AND DUDLEY MOORE: Goodbye (Cube). The once hilarious finale from the "Not Only... But Also" show now sounds very dated. On the other side, Dud's Welsh music teacher shows Pete's rich oaf round a keyboard. Funny at least twice.

CRAZY CAVAN 'N' THE RHYTHM ROCKERS: My Little Sister's Gotta Motorbike EP (Charly). The first rockabilly band I ever saw and by far the best. Cavan Grogan's veteran Welsh mob don't just churn out purist re-treads, they add a tangible individuality to four raucous originals.

MR. BLOE: Groovin' With Mr. Blow (Old Gold). A semiall Kenny Laguna construction. Apart from that, I've heard groovier weather forecasts.

T FORD AND THE BONESKINNERS: Quarter To Three (Splash). Remember doo-wop? Showaddywaddy do and this shares a similarity with "Dancing Party." Very classy, without The Darts' humour or Showaddywaddy's crassness.

CHARLIE BRONSON pretends he's never held a gun before.

The Goodbye Girl

Directed by Herbert Ross Starring Richard Dreyfuss
and Marsha Mason

TA-TA

WITHOUT PUTTING Richard Dreyfuss down, I'm blown if I know why Hollywood should dignify a turn with its coveted Best Actor Oscar. Health foods, meditation, bumpkinousness — the role is the usual Neil Simon book-end, devised to grate upon its opposite number rather than stand independently, and, fair play, Dreyfuss does invade these flat, stale and profitable waters like an alka-seltzer. But Best Actor...?

The situation, like The Odd Couple, revolves around the incompatibility of a flat-share, Dreyfuss as the cockoon, Marsha Mason and daughter the incumbents. Throughout their neat but unfunny exchange of hostilities there lurks a sense of rubber sabre-rattling; you know that someone's gonna get their blankets tucked in.

In fact, the potentially funniest scene in the film in which Dreyfuss, dressed as Richard III, comforts the weissenheimer button (Quinn Cummings), goes for nothing due to an excess of schmaltz.

The Broadway sit-com convention, pretty well patented by Neil Simon, doesn't pretend to last much longer than Baby Cham bubbles, but this one is more rubble than bubble, structurally shambling and laboured.

THE ICE-CREAM MEN COMETH!

TELEFON — CHEAP RATED, EVEN FOR WET WEEKENDS IN WIGAN

Telefon

Directed by Don Siegel
Starring Charles Bronson
(CIC)

IF A STRONG suggestion of Justice Shallow hung about The Shaolin, then Don Siegel's latest, Telefon, is indelibly associated with Polonius. Empty, footling, antiquated. As a B-film director, Siegel — like Sam Fuller and Budd Boetticher — showed what brevity and sharp editing could do for the action movie: Riot In Cell Block Eleven, Baby Face Nelson, Invasion Of The Body Snatchers. His track record in the major league has been less impressive, with tedious passages between the convulsions, and only Dirty Harry the glittering exception.

The story of Telefon is perfectly functional — and Siegel at his best has never needed more than a rising crisis to hand his gifts on. Back in the Cold War, the Russians planted a network of psychologically conditioned saboteurs in the most innocuous American settings. A top Russian (Donald Pleasence) defects, and buckets about the States activating the human warheads. Moscow sends in a man (Charles Bronson) to flip the defector and pull out the wiring before the current entente with America can be jeopardized. The Americans send in Lee Remick to keep tabs on Bronson and kill him.

Plenty of scope, then, for closely observed tensions and detonations. All of them are missed. Bronson looks Russian but bored; Remick has nothing to do. Pleasence relies on his stonish physiognomy.

The opening scenes in Moscow suggest that Don Siegel has fallen among thespians, with Patrick Magee and Alan Badel turning their lines every way but loose: the Vowel Rubato. In fact, the only performance worth a fart comes from the girl boss in charge of the CIA computer: cameo performance, bijou fart.

Even the highpoint — a confrontation in a backcountry bar between Bronson, Pleasence and a snake — went for nothing. There is a category of film rating called Wei Weekend In Wigan. This fails to gain admission. I saw it on a plane — captive audience, no chute — where the only competition was the lifebelt instructions. The lifebelt instructions won by a nozzle.

THE TRUCK and BRIDGE, two stars in WAGES OF FEAR

Wages Of Fear

Directed by William Friedkin
Starring Roy Scheider and Bruno Cremer
(CIC)

REMAKES ARE notoriously difficult to bring off and William Friedkin has had enough problems with Wages Of Fear to disavow any film-maker from ever attempting one again. His film opened last year in the States under the title Sorcerer, running two hours. Audiences, expecting more gore from the director of The Exorcist, were perplexed when confronted with a tense drama involving four men driving two truck-loads of volatile nitro-glycerine over treacherous terrain in South America.

The distributors acted swiftly, changing the title and, possibly embarrassed by the implied criticism of US involvement in South American oil fields, lopping half-an-hour off the final cut for good luck.

Friedkin's disowned this version, the crowds are still staying away and no-one's happy.

Henri-Georges Clouzot's 1953 original is accurately considered a masterpiece of suspense. He used the 200-mile journey undertaken by the four desperate men to sustain tension and examine his characters' shifting relationships. Although credibility was often strained perilously close to the limit, the film still overall possessed powerful verisimilitude and endures as an epic drama of failure.

Frostily, enough remains of Friedkin's movie to suggest that his version would have been a worthy testament of Clouzot's classic (it remains 'dedicated' to the Frenchman).

Roy Scheider, as always, convincingly conveys a harried menace and the superb camerawork (by John Stephens and Dick Bush) manages to suggest an almost tactile sense of dirt, grease, heat and sweat in the seedy, impoverished little community. And the telephoto shots of the huge trucks in traction make them resemble prehistoric leviathans as they lumberingly negotiate ungodly terrain.

But the enforced cuts ultimately defeat Friedkin's purpose and we are left with an unsatisfying cramped and sordid little thriller. Incidentally, Sorcerer is the name of one of the trucks (the other is L2210).

MIDNIGHT EXCESS

AFTER MUCH deliberation, it has finally been decided that one of the first widescreen drug movies ever to come out of Britain will be an official entry at this year's Cannes Film Festival.

Midnight Express, directed by Alan Parker of Bugsy Malone fame, is the true-life tale of American Billy Hayes who, aged 21, was busted trying to take two kilos of hashish out of Turkey. The lower court in Istanbul sentenced him to four years two months imprisonment for possession but then, just 53 days before he was due for release, his case was reheard in a higher court in Ankara, the charge was changed to smuggling, and he was sentenced to life imprisonment (later reduced to 30 years). After serving about a year of this, Billy Hays managed to escape into Greece where he was given political asylum.

Brad Davis plays the part of Hayes and the movie also stars Randy Quaid (The Last Detail) and John Hurt as a junkie called Max. Not surprisingly the film has already become something of a political hot potato. The French were worried about approving it for Cannes as it paints a bleak portrait of the Turkish penal system and the French were worried that it could jeopardise their diplomatic relations with Turkey.

The Golden Age Of The Hollywood Stars

(United Artists)

WHAT BOY HAS NOT dreamed of doffing the buttons with Guy of Gisbourne athwart some spiral staircase — floppy-topped boots, unlaced doublet, teeth slung like a hammock under the hairline tazz, and temerity enough to nibble a grape before spitting the sneerer? Beats there a heart so sluggish that its owner has not eaten his ticket as the socially-maligned in the crombie yells out his defiance of society before dying of its morse metal reply? Lurks there a reviewer who does not yearn daily to be known as Mad Dog Earle, Johnnie Rocco, Captain Blood?

Nostalgia then, and dreams — but this double album of movie soundtracks is more than the chronicle of simple heroes and simpler houses. Mythologies don't change much, and if our century has seen some technological hedge-hopping by the yamspinners — vellum to celluloid to vinyl — the content has remained the same. Ulysses, Sam Spade and Elvis are rubbing togas in that comprehensive Pantheon in the sky.

Warner Bros fielded a phenomenal bunch of talent Bogart's career, for example, remained beached for years because the studios had all the hoods they could handle in the triumvirate of Cagney, Edward G. Robinson and George Raft. Pat O'Brian's collar never had a chance to go to the laundry. In the swashbuckler too, Warners swathed the board with Errol Flynn as the roistering redistributor of wealth in forest and main, and Basil Rathbone in opposition, using a wide vocabulary to show his lack of decent impulses.

Bette Davis and Joan Crawford took care of the suffering, cornering the market in spoiled heiresses and lovers with the life-expectancy of fruit flies. Olivia de Havilland was sweetness itself: no-one made this Marian in Sherwood Forest. Ann Sheridan, the original Oomph Girl, had seen it all twice and dealt wisecracks from the hip while serving coffee'n'hash. Bacall and Bergman shared Begie between them, one whistling, the other requesting.

We all have our favourite movies, and the compilers have included a near-psycho number of mine: The Big Sleep, The Maltese Falcon, Casablanca, White Heat, The Adventures Of Robin Hood. From now on, no excuses for getting Cody Jarrett's epitaph wrong will be accepted. Buy it.

AND ALL OVER LONDON FROM SUNDAY APRIL 30

SOON THE HEAVY HORSES WILL BE COMING HOME.

Hheavy Horses is the new album from Jethro Tull. Just one album ago, the world discovered a new and different Ian Anderson. Still exhibiting his wonderfully wicked sense of humour "Songs From The Wood" also lovingly took a musical tour of the English countryside. "Heavy Horses", dedicated to the Shires, Percherons, and Suffolks that were once the backbone of rural England, travels through the same pastoral country of today exploring even newer directions. Musically it's one of the best Tull albums. Ian Anderson's lyrics being as sharp and perceptive as ever.

Included on the album you'll find the single "Moths" which has "Life Is A Long Song" on the B side, and if you're lucky, you'll be able to see Jethro Tull on their forthcoming sold out UK tour.

In the meantime take a listen to the album. Heavy Horses is the one worth coming home to.

THE TRIAL OF JAMES PAUL McCARTNEY

IMAGINE THAT Paul McCartney didn't bury himself in hermit-like seclusion in Liverpool after the assassination attempt by Jack Ruby that followed the break-up of The Beatles. Imagine instead that he formed a group with his wife, put out a massively successful string of easy listening albums and singles, became the most prominent of the ex-Beatles and climaxed his career with a tribute to his Scottish home-from-home*. And imagine NME sent ROY CARR to interview him . . .

Stewth, what are you lot trying to pull on me now!

Pic: CHALKIE DAVIES

ROY CARR: Once they've attained a certain level of popularity, many artists consider it unnecessary to converse with the public through the media . . .

PAUL McCARTNEY: Just do it through their music . . . ?

Yes. So why do you feel it important to do press interviews?

One of the reasons is that I like to meet the people who do interviews and who're slagging me off in the papers. When they're just faceless figures, it can drive you a bit mad, so I prefer to meet them face to face.

I know for a fact that you follow the music press more than most artists care to admit to?

Yeah, but it's fallen off a bit lately . . . they seemed to be slagging off everything for a few months and it kinda put me off. Except for who was the newest face that week, nobody seemed positive about anything or anyone.

But in terms of intense activity, parallels could be drawn with the kind of excitement that was generated during the '60s British beat boom?

Oh sure — get rid of the old and bring on the new. I don't mind that one bit, but what put me off was the way it was done in some papers. It just tended to be millions of new groups and nobody seemed to know if they were good or bad. It was all those young Hampstead kids trying to be ultra-hip and ever-so-cool.

(Mimics). 'So I sez to 'im, "What's s'happenin' maaan?" and 'e sez "Fuck off." ' It quickly became a cliché and boring to read.

But then, that's always bound to happen, every few years, when rock is rejuvenated and the scene experiences a drastic upheaval.

 This deception is purely to soften the blow for any reader who finds the factual Paul McCartney hard to take. Face it kids, this interview's for real.*

Nevertheless, despite the over-enthusiasm of some people and the lack of vision of others, a lot of good music has been made over the last couple of years.

Actually, I quite like a lot of the new sounds . . . I quite like Elvis Costello. I like Nick Lowe because I've known him for a very long time. I really do like what they're doing . . . being a bit more adventurous. That's what I like most about what they're doing.

What's your immediate reaction when suddenly you're confronted with photographs of some of the groups lumped under the power pop hype? Is it like looking at a photograph of yourself when you were 19 and pretty new to the business?

Oh you mean people like The Pleasers? Yeah, there are a few of them trying to do The Beatles and you have The Jam doing The Who. I suppose it's quite pleasant!

But many of the so-called power poppers wouldn't have stood an earthly if they had been in direct competition with the groups they are slavishly emulating?

Probably not. But I don't know enough about their music to offer constructive judgment.

I'd say most of them are like all those Mersey groups who cut a couple of singles on the strength of Beatlemania and disappeared just as quickly?

MULL OF KINTYRE: I nearly didn't put it out... I knew old folks, Scottish people, the Campbeltown Pipers liked it... but at that time everything was punk. But I checked it with a lotta young kids and they liked it, so we went on with it...

Could be... but I'm quite sure that if we were all back in the early '60s... all the same age group, I'd have a good go at blowing them off the stage. 'Cause that's what it was all about back then. Competition was really tough. Trouble is, the New Wave was, to some extent, concerned with getting back to making killer singles, but a lot of hands failed to do that and many of the also-rans were rushed into making albums before they were either ready or had built up a strong enough following?

Correct. That's why I particularly like Elvis Costello. He writes and performs good material. There have been a few great records to date out of that whole thing. I like "Pretty Vacant." You liked "Pretty Vacant," didn't you? I remember your review... it was like The Second Coming?

AS AN ARTIST you're in quite a unique situation. Having been tremendously successful twice over...

Two bites of the cake and both with the cherry on top!

To one section of the public you're a national monument...

(Laughs) Like Nelson!

Your past runs concurrent with your present. Stateside, adverts appear in the press for McCartney look-a-likes for the latest "Beatlemania" stage show whilst at the same time the latest Wings record is topping the charts.

I suppose it's funny when you stop to think about it. I just look upon all that kinda thing the same way as everyone else does... that they're re-doing The Beatles... it's just something interesting to read about. So, I'm living with it the same as everyone else.

If anyone asks me what I'm doing now, I talk about Wings. People think I must feel very strange seeing my old life constantly coming back, but it's no different than, say, Diana Dors writing her exposés. To me The Beatles are just old newspaper clippings. The fact that people still live it out is just a compliment to me. Rather they live out our past than Chiff's (Richard).

Actually I quite like it, there's lotta great memories and the only time it really offends me is when they take something and try to lay down the exorcism of what went on... like trying to do your autobiography on film. People have wanted to do that a couple of times. I don't think I'd enjoy that very much. It'll be OK when I'm dead, but I don't want to see some actor representing me and saying this is what it was really like — because the only person who knows that is me.

What has been the biggest crisis you've had to face since forming Wings?

I think just the idea of going back and starting all over again... knowing that inevitably people are gonna compare it with The Beatles, and knowing that there was absolutely no way you could ever be that good. Wings were a new group and people forget The Beatles took ten years to get as good as they got. That kinda situation made me well-paranoid, as to whether it's good enough, are we good enough, should we keep going, or should we even bother in the first place?

I mean, why not just sit back and live off the money we've already got. Sure, there was quite a bit of that kinda thinking goin' around.

It was really that serious?

Oh yeah... when you've got a big American tour lined up... see, I was trying very hard to play it all down... keep casual... we're just taking a band to America and we'll have a good time lads. But then you start getting the journalists saying, it's ten years since former Beatle Paul McCartney has been back to the Beatle stage and Beatle Beatle and it's going to be as good as the Beatle Beatles and will they play Beatle Beatle songs, or is it gonna be...?

Suddenly, that kinda thing starts piling in on you and you start to have these horrible thoughts, well it just might not be as good like... but we'll have a good go like. So first night gigs in America and stuff like that tend to be nerve-racking.

The worst gig we ever did for nerves was Elstree. There were a couple of moments during the set that I went into a blind panic. After the gig, we put on a front and said we weren't nervous but you should have seen us before the set... we had a black trombonist (Tony Dorsey) and I swear he went white with nerves that night!

It seems that you're forever haunted by your past. Whenever you're about to release a new record or announce tour dates, the event has a habit of being slightly overshadowed by "Beatles To Re-form For Jubilee Concert" — slanted press stories. Does this get you down?

PHOTOGRAPH BY CHALICE DAVIES

If you're gonna survive...

Never mind how I feel, how do you think Denny feels? Obviously, everybody immediately comes to me like I'm Mick Jagger and Denny is just Bill Wyman. Again, it's just another of those things I've learned to live with — but hopefully time will out. Let's be honest, a speculative "Beatles To Re-form" story always make a good headline. (Pauses)... Yes, it really does get you down. I'd like to explain a few things to you...

When you first come into music — show-biz — you come in all dreamy eyed and think it's all like the movies — Expresso Bongo or The Girl Can't Help It.

For instance, you can be out somewhere and a press cameraman can come up to you and feel that he's got the right to take your picture. Now, before you get into this business you really don't realise that it's gonna happen all the time... you don't realise they're gonna invade your privacy quite so much as they do in America — here too! Those kinda things get you down. Like, when I first met Linda I'd about grown out of it. I knew exactly what the scene was and when the press came up and wanted to take my picture, I'd learnt that there really wasn't much I could do about it. It didn't matter where we went, photographers used to pop up and say can we take your picture and I'd say no. They'd ask why and I'd tell them, I'm having a quiet night out and I didn't feel like it, which I maintain is the right of anybody. So they'd turn round and say, my editor has instructed me to either follow you around or squat on your doorstep until I get a picture, so have I to sneak a shot or...

Once you realise that kinda mentality exists you either spend your whole life trying to crusade against it or you just stand there and grin rather sickly. At least that way there's a picture of you looking vaguely happy, otherwise they print one of you looking like you're on the run and you end up hating that even worse.

If you're gonna survive, you learn to cope with the press... and people coming up to you in a restaurant when you're trying to have a quiet meal with your old mates and sticking an autograph book under your nose. It can get to be a drag but then it's an occupational hazard. That's the price of stardom. What I want to know is how you react when someone you don't even know suddenly gets his name in the papers and appears on television offering The Beatles millions of dollars to re-form for a one-off concert?

What can you do about it? It's like when Muhammad Ali wanted people to stop calling him Cassius Clay... well, I wish they'd start referring to me as a member of Wings instead of ex-Beatle Paul McCartney's new group. You can't get too upset about it. You have to be gracious and try and look upon the good side of it... at least they're still writing about us.

Not everyone thinks along those lines. I was in a local record shop when a bunch of young schoolkids came in, picked up a Beatles compilation, recognised you and I heard one of them enquire who the other three were? It's like Derek Taylor said, he couldn't imagine a time when people might not know who The Beatles were, but it happens. Let's be truthful, the really young kids know much more about Wings than The Beatles. We're making records. The Beatles don't. They just look upon The Beatles as being some old group I used to play in!

LINDA, when you married Paul you came in for a lot of adverse criticism for marrying "public property".

LINDA: For a long time I never took it seriously...

McCartney: She thought she was just coming over to England to marry me and that we were just gonna have a nice time. She'd forgotten just how famous I was and people would say, look at her!

It got worse when you joined Wings.

LINDA: I was pretty innocent about those matters at that time. And I kept on thinking it didn't affect me.

McCartney: But it did affect you. It was lousy and no one likes that. If you kinda know Linda — see her day to day — she's nothing like the image she projects. Quite the opposite. People often come up to me and say Linda's not at all like they imagined her to be!

What image have they formulated?

Quite a hard image. But, she's not really like that.

LINDA: I thought, here's all these people who I've never met actually writing about me, discussing me in their papers and worse still, most of it was untrue. Things about my childhood... my whole life, and people believed what they read.

McCartney: That whole ludicrous Eastman-Kodak thing. They had her appear like some big Eastman-Kodak heiress... and most people must have thought, hey-hey, that figure's McCartney's got his feet under the table and married her for her money and a few rolls of film!

LINDA: It still fingers... I've just had an exhibition of my photographs in L.A. and the critic from one of America's big art magazines wrote something to the effect — "Linda McCartney, even though she is from the Eastman-Kodak family..."

They may have let Linda off the hook, but Paul, how do you feel about recent criticism that you are trying to play the Young Country Squire? Oh, you mean that thing that appeared in People magazine which said: "Paul McCartney with his aristocratic posture..."

Dunno about an aristocratic posture, more like piles... Yeah, it's weird reading that about yourself. It's like a school teacher saying something unpleasant about you that's not true, but they're just saying it to have a go at you.

(Pauses)... I suppose there is some basis there for truth... Yes, I can see why they think I'm trying to affect an aristocratic posture... but I'm not. It's not what it appears to be.

The country gentleman bit... that's really all down to when I was a kid... as a kid you like the earth, love rolling around on it. Well, when you grow up you assume that that feeling is gone, but when I bought the farm in Scotland I realised that it hadn't gone. Suddenly I could lay down in a field exactly the same way as when I was a kid, enjoying the same emotions, and that had absolutely nothing to do with wanting to pose as the big country squire. I just wanted a field to lay down in. I'm lucky to be able to afford one and have a good time. What with some of the stuff that's gone down in the past, I could have easily gone under.

Such as?

The Beatles breaking up!

At that time, of the four, you were portrayed as being the villain of the piece. It was Paul McCartney who broke up The Beatles!

Yeah, I was the baddie... but only because I was fighting Allen Klein. And, as I knew Klein was the baddie, and the other three didn't, I had to do anything to fight him.

UNLIKE MANY artists — especially American — you've never been surrounded by a large entourage of yes-men and hangers-on?

Certainly not. I hate all that, but even so it's very easy to get into. I'll tell you how it happens. If you go working places like Las Vegas or get involved with some big agency or top manager it can start happening without you ever becoming aware of it until it's too late, and suddenly there's dozens of hangers-on that you've never seen before.

Whereas some people need to be constantly surrounded by people to make them feel like a star, our set-up is much more down-to-earth. Anyone who works for us has a specific job to do. If I feel like a star, it's because I feel I'm writing extremely well and not because I've got people on hand to tell me I'm a star. It's not like a life-style. I've always been against the trappings... chauffeurs... I've always driven myself.

I hate sitting in the back of limo with the chauffeur persistently turning round and telling you who he's had in the car and what they said and what they did. I had more than enough of that with The Beatles. You see, in those early days, I kinda tried out all those things — the trappings of stardom so to speak — and I suppose it's those artists who do drag around all those hangers-on who liked it and now have reached a point where they can't live without it. They're the ones who probably feel insecure.

I used to have a couple of people living-in but in the end they knew my house better than I did and I felt daft asking them where things like my books were. So I got rid of 'em and one of them sold their story to a magazine for £8,000 and as it turned out it was all lies. Had me having orgies with Julie Felix, when all that happened was that she dropped by one evening to play me her new record... honest!

But those who write about the aristocratic posture might think otherwise?

True. I went up to Liverpool and I was sitting around with some friends having a drink when this young sculptor said I was working class. I said, "Piss-off I am working class... I've never gone into any other class. I earn a living and if that's not working class what is?"

P

AUL'S PUNK SONG: At the moment I've got a punk song but I daren't do it. If I release it people will only slag me off. It's called "Boil Crisis" — "One night in the life of a kid named Sid, he scored with a broad in a pyramid . . ."

Have you become immune to criticism?

It's just part of the whole game and that's the way you're supposed to look at it. But then, you read things where someone is doing this big put-down number, claiming I'm snooty rich — that's the kinda thing I don't like. Look, I'm just like anybody else, I don't like being slagged off, especially in public . . .

LINDA: Especially by someone who can't do what you do.

McCartney: . . . that's the worst thing . . . when someone says my bass playing is real lousy. You feel like handing them the instrument and saying O.K. son, you show me how to do it. Their reply will always be, no I can't do it, but I can tell you that you weren't playing good . . .

LINDA: Throughout their life, all the really artistic people who I have admired got slagged off by the critics . . .

McCartney: I know that anyone who has to either listen to or review 16 albums a week isn't gonna end up loving music now is he? They probably end up hating it. The one little album he does like is therefore gonna get an incredible review . . . I bet "Rumours" didn't get unanimous favourable reviews when it was first released. I sometimes feel sorry for writers but normally I hate 'em, because they're slagging me off. But I am fully aware that they've got a tough job on their hands.

In so many interviews you come across as extremely affable, but by the same token you have a way of talking a lot and saying very little. Is this intentional. Are you that guarded?

Yes I am . . . You've got to be guarded. You're laying yourself wide open by doing interviews.

Do you have stock answers prepared for emergencies?

Yes and when I find that happening I try and cut an interview short.

And you don't allow yourself to be unduly provoked?

Right. But then I'm not easy to provoke. I go back to memories of Brian Matthews coming out (on Thank You Lucky Stars) and saying "She Loves You" is the worst thing that The Beatles have ever done and a week later saying "She Loves You" grows on you and will probably do quite well! So when you're aware that those kinda things exist, it's really not worth retaliating. You've got to be cagey, but then I can always give as good as I get.

WITH YOUR track record, you must be extremely aware of precisely what a large section of the record-buying public want to hear and what they will subsequently rush out and buy. Having almost patented this fail-safe formula, do you apply it to everything you write?

DENNY LAINE: That's taking it a bit too far

OK then . . . do you feel that as a songwriter you're still adventurous?

McCartney: If you're just making No. 1 hits, no.

DENNY LAINE: Paul's only gonna write something that pleases him . . .

McCartney: Sure, you can write stuff and know, ah this will get 'em and at the same time secretly think to yourself, yeah but they're daft to buy this one — it's just pap! But let me tell you, those are the songs that don't work. From the start, you have to be a bit intrigued with the idea or something about it . . . or, when you play it to a mate he has to say, yeah, I like it. But because of who you are, there are not many people who would have the nerve to turn around and tell you that you'd just written a piece of crap?

That's true, but on the other hand you can get too worried about all that stuff and start analysing the hell outta everything to the point where you're too hung-up to write a note. There is a possibility that if you're in it just to sell records — which everyone is — when you've been doing it for a long time and become good and very successful at it, I agree, there is a risk that you're not gonna be as adventurous as you could or should be . . . we've been talking about that very thing quite recently.

Many people cop-out and take the short-cut?

Sure, but on the new LP we're trying to do both things at once . . . put on nice ballads like "I'm Carrying", but with things like "Morse Moose And The Grey Goose", the more commercially-minded people will say, what the hell's that on there for . . . it's plain silly! When you released "Mull Of Kintyre", you must have known at the back of your mind that you'd come in for heavy critical flak?

And that's why I nearly didn't put it out — and that's a fact. I knew old folks, Scottish people and the Campbelltown Pipers liked it . . . but at that time it seemed that everything was punk. You know, I could almost picture the lay-outs of the singles pages in the different papers.

PICTURE: CHALKIE DAVIES

. . . you learn to cope with the press.

Amongst the headings "Crash!! Yuck!! Rodents!! Destroy!!" I could see a cutesy little picture of the three of us. But I checked out "Mull Of Kintyre" with a lotta young kids and they liked it and so we went with it. But you can't release records because someone is gonna slag it . . . you just go along with your instincts and hope that you're right.

It's like you set yourself up for the chop with "Mull Of Kintyre" but at the same time vindicated yourself with the flip "Girls School"? That was the exact reason for putting that song on the flip and that's why it was a double A-side. "Girls School" was aimed at the young kids who are just into dancing. However, releasing it as a double A-side in America was a mistake and it didn't do very well as a result.

Except for a couple of cuts, in particular "Name And Address", the new Wings album is very short on uptempo rock material?

That's an Elvis-type, Sun one and not a screamin' Little Richard-type track. It's held back. But the more rocker side is starting to come out much more since I made that album and maybe that will be the style of the next album. We do keep talking about going in the studio and cutting a no-nonsense rock 'n' roll album, to just get it out of our system. It's primarily just down to what songs you're writing at any particular time and at the time we were preparing "London Town" we didn't seem to be writing any real hard rockers.

If anything there's a subtle psychedelic undercurrent on many cuts. Some of the arrangements can be traced back to "Sgt. Pepper" and "The White Album".

I suppose we were going for that kind of feel by doing more complex arrangements but I'm not about to analyse it. Next time around we'll go for a bit more sweat. Really, it's down to writing sweaty numbers and believe me, they're the hardest of the lot to write.

HOW DO YOU feel about the release of The Beatles' "Hamburg Tapes", "The Hollywood Bowl Concert" and the "Rock 'n' Roll" and "Love Songs" re-packages? "The Hamburg Tapes" . . . er, a bit numb really. On a personal level it's quite nice to have a memory of those days, but other than that it didn't mean too much to me . . . it's alright . . . actually I don't think I've even got a copy of it. On a business level, it was all very weird. Nevertheless, I don't think it does any harm. "The Hollywood Bowl Concert" was over ten years too late in coming out . . .

We never wanted it out. But then about five or six years after we'd split with Capitol Records, they acquired the rights to all that material and didn't bother asking us any more about what should be released. We never used to like the tapes of those two concerts, because we always thought all the songs were played much too fast — see, we always played everything twice its original speed on stage. We also thought it was all out of tune, but I've heard the record and I gotta admit it sounds pretty good. Screaming's good. Sounds like a bunch of seagulls.

But like I said, nowadays we can't even say if we like the cover artwork or not, it's got nothing to do with us. Actually, all those old Beatles repackages smell a bit like a rip-off to me, but if people still want to buy it that's fine.

To me, The Beatles were a great group, but unfortunately they broke up so what are you gonna do about it . . . sit around doing nothing for the rest of my life, living in the past or do I keep playing? Wings is the band I'm now with and thankfully I've passed through the period of thinking, can I still do it, which I went through directly after the break-up. I spent hours moaning to Linda about can I still write . . . worrying if I'd dry up?

Was that just a (temporary) trauma? We still managed to make albums at the time, but it was probably just my usual paranoia. I've listened to those albums since and the ones I thought sounded crummy then they sound alright now.

The impression one gets from some of your early solo material is that, following the break-up of The Beatles, you were testing the market?

I can't answer that. I was just writing songs and putting out what I felt to be the best at any given time. I never think about doing market tests. I just work on the assumption that there are a lot of people who like my stuff and that's all there is to it. Sure, I sometimes have my doubts about certain songs . . . like I said, at one point I wasn't going to put out "Mull Of Kintyre" as a single — a Scottish ballad, it's gonna sound ridiculous. At the moment I've got a punk song but I daren't do it!

Why not?

Dunno. I suppose because if I released it as a single, people will only slag me off and say, oh look McCartney's goin' punk! He's just trying to keep up with the trends.

I don't feel like any one age group myself. I see all age groups. Getting back to my punk song, it's called "Boil Crisis". I saw a headline in a paper that said, "Oil Crisis" and . . . anyway, it goes like this:

"One night in the life of a kid named Sid, he scored with a broad in a pyramid/And there's only one thing holding him in check, He knew that during the ancient dance, if she should glance at the huge unsightly boil upon his neck, he had a boil crisis!" And then the chorus comes in . . .

Look, I've always had very wide musical tastes. I mean, I love all those old songs in that Pennies From Heaven TV series on BBC, though I pale when it gets to Engelbert — my musical taste doesn't go that far. For me, on his own terms, Fred Astaire can be just as heavy as Robert Plant — see, it doesn't matter what era they come from.

ON THE FIRST couple of Beatles albums, praise was lavished upon your versatility in programming rockers like "I Saw Her Standing There" and "All My Loving" with down-tempo melodies like "A Taste Of Honey" and "Till There Was You". Nowadays, your penchant for exposing the more romantic aspects of your character often draws harsh criticism?

Well that's me. I did "When I'm 64" on "Sgt. Pepper" and what was that all about? It wouldn't be difficult for me to record something very adventurous . . . free form guitar solos, things like the reverbs they use on reggae dub records . . . it's just that you don't always get around to actually doing it.

Yeah, I'd like to do an adventurous album and we're discussing the possibilities of doing just that for the hell of it. No formula style . . . I'd welcome the change . . . love having fun with the music instead of getting my head down and thinking along the lines of, "I am Led Zeppelin and I've got to come out with something heavy because that's what they expect from me". And, that probably is the biggest problem . . . getting yourself pigeon holed . . .

SUDDENLY, Wings have gone full circle — the line-up being depleted to that of around the "Band On The Run" period. You've gone through quite a number of personnel changes in a relatively short time: three drummers, two guitarists . . .

In putting any band together, you're lucky if you can find compatible personalities and it seems that the three of us (Linda and Denny) are really the only ones who've remained compatible. The others just stayed sidemen.

Could this have been because they were intimidated by working with an ex-Beatle? Some people have said that and I tend to believe there was a bit of that in it.

DENNY LAINE: But once they get to know you, then it's purely down to whether or not they want to push themselves and make a positive contribution.

Judging from the credits on "London Town" (Laine co-wrote five songs with McCartney), there appears to be sufficient latitude for anyone to step forward and contribute to the Wings repertoire. It's never quite come across as just Paul McCartney and backing band.

But it does end up a little like that because I write a lot of the songs and do most of the singing. From the very beginning, I never intended that Wings should just be me and anyone would do to play back-up. But as to why there have been changes . . . look, when you've been in bands, when you've been through all the hassles . . . how can I put it, you reach a point where you realise that you don't need a situation where, if someone is a brilliant player but just being around him gets to be obnoxious . . . who needs it! I'm not saying that's the reason why we've had so many personnel changes in Wings, all I'm saying is that you've gotta feel right together and enjoy one another's company.

You've gotta be able to say, I don't feel like working today, and have everyone jump on yer back.

I'm not a kid any more. I don't need to have anyone tell me, you gotta do this, yer gotta do that . . . I want some time off . . . if not, then the whole thing ain't worth anything.

MIND MACHINE MUSIC

Who Are These Men And Why Are They Wearing Red But Looking Right?

ANDY GILL Enters The Modern Metropolis To Find Out

KRAFTWERK The Man Machine (Capitol)

IT IS rather unfortunate that Kraftwerk's current popularity is based, to a large extent, on the chic appeal of David Bowie's favour. True, such favour helps shift units, but the inevitable result is that there are now a lot of folk around who don't know why they like Kraftwerk, but are sure there must be something in them because David likes them. Even worse, there are some who take the band unquestioningly and appropriate the desire to be machines themselves.

There is, however, a lot more to Kraftwerk's music than mere romantic realism. "Autobahn" could have been said to have introduced the romantic realist phase — cars singing, as the band describe it — with lots of Doppler shifts and the like set in a lengthy, repetitive (but not strictly minimalist) piece which, due to the essentially shallow concept, palled very quickly. "Radioactivity", a rather patchy concept album, nevertheless held the germs of Kraftwerk's current stance, especially in Emil Schult's visuals. But it was in "Trans Europe Express" that all the elements finally came together. With that album Kraftwerk metamorphosed from gimmicky sound-effects peddlars into possibly the most interesting band working in the rock field.

Devo can doddle around in their silly suits and give evasive answers to questions about their 'philosophy' for all they're worth; the fact remains that Kraftwerk are the only completely successful visual/aural fusion rock has produced so far.

This success is rooted in the conceptual framework they impose on their work — a framework which dissolves the argument about form and content usually levelled at them, arguments like: "Yeah, I see what they're doing, I like the image but not the music." Surely if you like the image, you'll see the music couldn't be other than it is. The form determines the content.

So what is the form? And why is "The Man Machine" the most successful exposition of this same form? And — more importantly — can the band go any further within their current framework?

The form can probably only be fully understood in relation to the German cultural and psychological make up — although it would be too easy to see the garish red, white and black cover to "The Man Machine" solely, as having a blatant Nazi connotation. More likely, it's a reference to totalitarian ideologies in general.

After all, communism and fascism are effectively two sides of the same coin: both require a reduction of the status of the individual to that of one unit in a society of identical units — an economic function that just happens to be a biological entity.

All societies tend towards this to differing degrees — it's known as "government" — but in totalitarian regimes the subordination of the individual to The State is held as a fundamental law of society. The "mass man" is promoted from the fantasy of constructivist theorists (of whom more later) to the cold reality of enforced uniformity — be the stereotype the blond-haired, blue-eyed Aryan or the cloth-capped Soviet worker. Internal peculiarities are cleansed away by increasingly subtle methods of coercion, backed up by the threat of force; the iron fist in the velvet glove.

Where Kraftwerk succeed is in their analysis of the unthinking bourgeois tendencies of post-war Europe as being themselves a variant on the totalitarian societal norm.

In the face of an increasing communist threat, frightened Europe entrenches itself deeper in bourgeois stereotypes: the "parks, hotels and palaces" and "promenades and avenues" of "Europe Endless" (from "Trans Europe Express"), resulting in the "real life and postcard use" of a continent-sized tourist resort living on the glories of a bygone age.

Those who believe the European situation to be a far cry from the oppression of the Soviet bloc need only glance at the enforcement methods recently introduced in West Germany to combat the terrorist threat to bourgeois attitudes and lifestyles. For instance, it's now an offence against The State to say things in public that aren't totally condemnatory of the Red Army Faction. The measures are even referred to as Enabling Laws, the exact term used in 1933 to describe those giving Hitler dictatorial powers.

In view of West Germany's current political climate, the seemingly innocent statement "Produced In West Germany" on the back cover of "The Man Machine" takes on a rather symbolic light. It is, after all, well known that Kraftwerk operate out of Düsseldorf, and yet you don't normally get a record's country of origin specified so ostentatiously.

The great age of the rise of totalitarianism was, of course, the '20s and '30s. Witness this quote from Joachim Fest's immense biography of Hitler to explain the popularity of fascism:

"During the '20s and '30s the mélange of elements that were regarded as modern and in keeping with the spirit of the age were technology and collectivist ideas, monumental proportions, bellicose attitudes, the pride of the mass man, and the aura of stardom."

It is surely not accidental that the six tracks which comprise "The Man Machine" are infused with these same elements. Occasionally, as on the title track or "Metropolis" (homage, one presumes, to Fritz Lang's film of the same name), the reference is direct and unmistakable: on others, such as "Space Lab" and "Neon Lights" (the best and longest track on the album), the emphasis is on technology.

But more importantly, Kraftwerk manage to convey the entire "mélange of elements" by musical means alone: the sparsity of the lyrics leaves the emphasis squarely on those robot rhythms, chilling tones and exquisite melodies.

The mastery with which Kraftwerk handle these aspects results in the most extraordinary unification of science and art, turning on its head the commonly accepted Kantian split between the classical and the romantic.

"The Robots" — soon to be a single — seems on first hearing to be merely an extension of the disco piss-take of "Showroom Dummies" (from "Trans Europe Express"). But try and decipher those computer-voice lyrics and you get menacing totalitarian overtones — "We're charging on to victory... We are the robots" — combining with a Russian phrase (also on the back cover), which seems to read "We are men, we are robots". It all leaves the listener rather disconnected.

Musically the album combines the inexorability of "Trans Europe Express" with the rhythmic intensity more usually associated with Giorgio Moroder — although it's worth noting that Kraftwerk were experimenting with such rhythms long before "I Feel Love", and that Moroder has openly acknowledged Kraftwerk's primacy in this field.

Of course, this is a bitch of a dance record; but its complexity of construction (there's a lot more than electronic percussion in there) makes it just as enjoyable for those with broken legs.

Anyone who's seen this necessarily static band on stage will realise that they take great trouble with their visuals, relating them to the music in a way which goes beyond the disparate "theatrical" antics of most rock musicians. So it is with the cover of "The Man Machine".

Karl Klefisch's artwork utilises the Prima geometrical composition and diagonal emphasis pioneered by Russian constructivist Lasar El Lissitzky. Lissitzky was actively involved in the Russian Revolution, and formulated theories of geometrical machine art which, since these were produced by machines, were the art of everyman, and perfectly suited to a communist society.

All this would naturally result in a "mass art" which admits of no variables or exceptions — repressive, totalitarian art for a repressive, totalitarian society.

Needless to say, Kraftwerk's

application of this principle to the mechanically reproduced mass art of recorded music is at once theoretically sound, perfectly executed and didactically cutting.

Lissitzky had connections with The Bauhaus, and it's pertinent to remember the Haus architect Le Corbusier's definition of a house as a machine for living in — and to ponder just what could live in a machine for living in. Answer — a machine, of course.

The crux of the matter, it seems, is whether Kraftwerk are satiric / didactic in intention, and are demonstrating the frightening logical conclusion of the totalitarian ideal or —

God forbid — whether they really do desire this status for the mass man.

And if the latter — is the desire sincere, or merely the application of Prussian thoroughness to art? (Like one Rudolph Schwarzkogler, who took his art of self-dismemberment so seriously, he eventually offed himself. Beat that, Iggy.)

Whatever, "The Man Machine" stands as one of the pinnacles of '70s rock music, and one which — to answer my earlier question — I doubt Kraftwerk will ever surpass.

You will buy it, or you will be deemed mentally unstable. Andy Gill

DAVID BOWIE / EUGENE ORMANDY & THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA

Prokofiev's Peter And The Wolf / Britten's Young Person's Guide To The Orchestra (RCA Import)

COMPOSER SERGEI Sergeievich Prokofiev was born in Sontzovka, Ukraine, in 1891 and died in Moscow in 1953.

Up until 1948, Prokofiev was described as a musical wit, enfant terrible and probably the greatest single influence in Soviet music. It had been said that much of his work was parody and that mockery was his meier. However, shortly after Prokofiev's death, fellow-composer Khatchaturian wrote: "Prokofiev was one of the greatest masters of modern orchestration and achieved effects stunning in their force and expressiveness. He was a tone painter who portrayed striking images with the palette of the orchestra."

That may well be the case, but on February 10, 1948, Prokofiev was one of a number of Russian composers publicly castigated in a resolution passed by The Central Committee Of The Communist Party. It states that Prokofiev's work, in particular two operas ("Duenna" and "The Story Of A Real Man") plus his "Ode On The End Of The War" and his Fifth Symphony, was "complex, marked by intellectual quality, and divorced from reality... marked by formalist perversions."

As it transpires, Prokofiev went along with the pompous charade and apologised: as a result, all his work leading up to his death was praised.

Though, amongst his varied and prolific work, Prokofiev had composed the soundtracks for Eisenstein's movie masterpieces Alexander Nevsky and Iskander Terrible. By far his most 'popular' work was a symphonic fairy tale he'd written in 1936 called "Peter And The Wolf".

Some musicologists have argued that "Peter And The Wolf" was more than just a children's fable, insisting that an analogue can be drawn between the characters in the tale and political life in the USSR during the 1930s.

Unfortunately, the composer is no longer available for comment. Over the years however, a number of 'popular' entertainers (!) have seized upon Prokofiev's fantasy and made bizarre attempts to personalise the narrative. As a child, I vaguely recall Danny Kaye's abomination. Similarly, a more recent rock treatment (sic) left much to be desired.

To his credit, The Master Of Disguises plays it dead straight, as does the Philadelphia Orchestra under the expert baton of Eugene Ormandy. As you may have already surmised, this is not the follow-up to "Heroes", neither is it a rock album by default. The fact that it appears on RCA's Red Seal classical label affirms this point.

It's strictly a one-off shot, apparently recorded by Bowie for his son Zowie and, I guess, children of all ages. Having long ago learned that all that one can expect from David Bowie is the unexpected, it is possible that, being in a position of some influence, he has taken this opportunity to introduce a section of the record-buying public to a field of music they would normally ignore. By the same token, Bowie is probably aware that the traffic might not be just one way!

I trust that people won't buy this album (the first few thousand are pressed on green plastic) just to update their Bowie collection and shelve it unplayed. Furthermore, I trust they won't ignore side two — Benjamin Britten's "Young Person's Guide To The Orchestra" simply because Bowie wasn't involved.

Prokofiev's son once said that his father wrote quite ordinary music and then Prokofievised it. I suppose, one could say the same thing about Bowie. Kindred spirits and all that, eh?

IMPORTS

IN THE jazz age, they were known as the territory bands; Outfits like Boots and His Buddies from Texas and Bennie Moten from Kansas City, bands that made it big in certain areas but either through choice or necessity failed to really make on a national level.

For a long while, Bob Seger seemed to epitomise the rock equivalent, a riot at Detroit's Cobo Hall but Mr Nobody at other points along the Greyhound route. And now Hounds, whose album "Unleashed" has been released by CBS, are being touted as prime examples of the genre. "Big in the middle-west", states their plugsheet, at the same time admitting that John Hunter (vocals and keyboards), Jim Orkis (guitars), John Horvath (drums), Glen Rupp (guitars), and Joe Cuttone (bass), who together comprise Hounds, have only grabbed support roles on out-of-state tours headed by the likes of Manfred Mann and G&S. So will they blast out of Illinois and blitz the world?

Somehow I think not. For though "Unleashed" has its moments there's an equal preponderance of overworked clichés, some predictable titles like "Drugland Weekend" and "I Love Me, Shove Me" ("Every successful album must have its real stoned drug song and explicit, pole-in-the-alley, love or sex song" — The Swamp Low Reed) which all come allied to some dire inner sleeve posing. So once again, I think not.

More to my somewhat eclectic taste is "Adam Wade" (Kirkliner), an unpretentious soft-soul item. I don't know if the singer is the same Adam Wade who quit his job as a bio-chemist at the Salk Laboratories in order to become a hit-maker for Coed back in the early '60s. If he is, then his voice has undergone a remarkable change.

But whoever the guy is, he's got class of Jerry Butler-like dimension and a handy line in Gene Autry and Gary Knight songs on which to test his tonality. The album contains at least a quartet of cuts in the eminently palatable single stakes. Okay, so it won't after the face of soul history and won't make any best album listing. But "Adam Wade" is upper-class Philly schmalz — and as such, it's great.

Those who can afford Nipponese imports are hereby advised that Flyover Records of 15 Queen Caroline Street, Hammersmith, London W.6, have just come up with a new catalogue listing around 2,000 Jap albums. No less than 28 different Beach Boys LPs appear — including "Shut Down Vol. 2", "Beach Boys Today", "Beach Boys Concert" and "Beach Boys Party" — while others that appear include OTO's "Live In Japan" (KOR 104), Deep Purple's "Last Concert In Japan '74" (KOR 78), "The Greatest Hits Of T.K. Soul" (KOR 19), "Heads, Hands And Feet" (KOR 89), a double-album: Miles Davis' "Miles In Tokyo" (AS 2046) and nearly 80 different singles by The Beatles, all in full colour sleeves with lyrics.

My advice is to send Flyover a large S.A.E. and enclose a note stating whether you're interested in jazz, rock, soundtrack or all three. Replies come courtesy of Kamikaze Incorporated.

The Impotence Of Being Ritchie

RAINBOW Long Live Rock 'n' Roll (Polydor)

GLENN HUGHES Play Me Out (Safari)

DAVID COVERDALE Northwinds (Purple)

IT IS being said, in these the Telecommunicated '70s when everything — sex, death, politics, political death, sexual politics — can be, and is reduced to the one glossy common denominator of good media copy, it is being said that Disco Music is our (global) anthem. We the automotons. Our Surf Music.

This is wrong. Disco is still constituted of very basic, essentially very human properties, even if its own particular 'fever' ain't the kind we unholy shit-gawdamn rock 'n' roll types prefer.

The graces and emotions invoked are traditional — transient physical perfection in an atmosphere the exact turnaround of home life (TV life): lights out; sound impenetrable; perfect brooding ground for narcissism and arrogance. If the actual music itself has become tantamount to soul-less, then that dehydration is only the historically inevitable intrusion of — quake — The Businessman and Technology. (Do you need second-hand Jungian tracebacks? Disco-pulse as sound of mamma's heart in the womb maybe?)

No, no, no, no! I have discovered the one and only TRUE sound of The Vacuum which threatens us all, and am at peace with my snakeskin boots.

Blackmore, Coverdale Hughes. All at one warp or another were members of that wonderful British dragon Deep Purple. Blackmore played and demolished guitar, and away from the beast (is it dead?), maintains a similar schedule of rampant screechy macho-Merlin HM with Ronnie Dio who screeches, and Cory Powell who is rampant.

Coverdale and Hughes are clone-alike, except Hughes plays more instruments. On "Play Me Out" (did it yourself, chief) Hughes operates electric devices which reproduce funky bleeps and WOOOISHH noises from finger cymbal through to food blender. We hear the sound of Zen-in-LA Baananamugga milk Zodiac-sign soul food, and P-funky it ain't.

Let us take the Hughes and Coverdale albums first. The collective enterprise is a spectacle akin to the local home-movie circle attempting a Star Wars cash-in. Vocals — both wish they were Stevie Wonder or, second choice, Robert Palmer. Lyrics — interchangeable. The usual hygienic cosmic jet-age pap, with a lot of ridin' home to lay my body down in the crystal silence of your obsequence. To that effect.

'Song structure' implies 're-tread'. The 'playing' (session musician or hep heavy cat friend) is slightly 'shop-soiled', as if everyone had Elastoplast-wrapped digits. The — dare I suggest it? — purpose? These men will stop at nothing to have you perceive them as Real Musicians, with knobs on. Galore.

Rainbow even crack jokes like B.O.C., although their mystical lyrics pale beside the more heavy-edged clout of that same group's more Oniia Board out-takes. They are, I admit, almost constant, which might well justify the Grabba Grubba sales which will doubtless ensue. Barring that, is the closing track "Rainbow Eyes" — very sub-MOR, very Sagar Puffs advertisement music. The contracted 240 seconds whipsnood which usually (not here) revs up into the cataclysmic meta-spanning flying lances bit.

Ouch, put down that mace. I'm sorry, is that the point? I fear it; a plastic holocaust in your heavy heads... I can understand the Donna Summer school of faked orgasm (I hardly expect the por gal to do aught else but fake it). But these guys! Having to fake impotency!

STEVEN T. West Coast Confidential (Dream)

"TO EVERYONE out there who wishes they were in California, LA ain't just palm trees and white beaches and Hollywood ain't just movie-stars. You know we got the metropolitan madness too... the all-night backbreak and the death-dance..."

That's Steven's message to the world on the title track of his first solo album. Makes you weep, don't it? Of course, judging by the rest of the album, Steven's managed to avoid all that city misery and had a great time.

This is trite, breezy, West Coast pop making a futile grasp for dignity by injecting the lyrics with bursts of satirical social commentary, just to remind you that pretty, bronzed, golden-haired Steven has seen a few basements and backstreets in his time.

Who knows, perhaps he's even been known to use the lavatory, just like less fortunate souls? You see Steven's one of these street poets. He's got the raw pulse of life sussed. He even knows big, grown-up words like 'transvestite', 'liquor' and 'moonbone'.

Moosbone? He's been stamped as this year's Bruce Springsteen and, as I wasn't impressed by the original, I've got no time for the diluted, clean-lined Kim Fowley version. That master of glossy product had a hand in the songwriting as well as the production of this album. There's a variety of hummable, inoffensive but entirely unadventurous tunes: "Outskirts Of Town" and "Face In The Crowd" are perhaps the most palatable. They make the mistake of including a lyric sheet so all the embarrassing clichés and condescending remarks you thought you heard are there in black and white.

The jerky, gagging beat of "LA Blues" is the funniest attempt at white reggae I can remember bearing. "These Are My Life And Times" is like the disco-Bee Goes without the funk. "West Coast Confidential", that woeful tale of parking lots and "the combat zone..." consists of Steven howling over a solitary piano with a saxophone complaining in the background like a disowned cat.

Maybe this makes sense when you're sitting in the California sun just like Frampton and The Eagles apparently do. In London, in the rain, it's annoying.

THE OUTLAWS

Bring It Back Alive (Arista)

DAGBLAMMIT. PARD-
NERS, youse guessed it — another brand spanking new live double platter!

Which, translated, means it's yet another platinum bore from yet another complacent US outfit only too keen to give addled American audiences what they want and, judging by the reaction, what they deserve.

But to call this set boring is to imbue The Outlaws with some sort of ability to impinge on one's consciousness which, palpably, is beyond them.

"The four guitar army," they're called in the brief introduction and one pointless chirping riff is piled upon another. There are no songs, no discernible melodies, nothing remotely approaching the sporadic 'listenable' qualities of even the flabby Eagles (with whom Outlaws were once, risibly, compared), just three guitarists, a bassist and two drummers flailing away like manic masturbators disappearing up their own sunsets.

The monumentally misfired
"Sick Around For Rock & Roll" cannot hope to prepare you for the massive tedium to come on the next three sides, culminating in side four's monstrous 20-minute paean to Lynyrd Skynyrd, "Green Grass And High Tides", all melodramatic Rush-like crescendos until the mundane chug-a-lugging sets in. Thank God they didn't have the audacity to actually attempt a Skynyrd number.

The First In A Succulent New Series. This Week's Menu By MEATY SMOFF

THIRD WORLD WAR

Third World War (Fly)

GOOD TO see Pye's Fly releasing something other than every bleep'n'squeak Mark Bolan ever laid on vinyl (God bless 'im), and "Third World War" is a genuine curiosity, sort of vass Edgar Broughton.

Public disaffection with the government, the police, the monarchy and the working class 'lout' is not exclusive to the spunky punks; as this 1970 relic proves.

Terry Stamp and Jim Avery wrote brutally simplistic diatribes which now come over as sad, timely reminders that everything's always been bollocks-up. Jagged and choppy, their songs lack the patronising tendencies of Lennon's political work and knock the new wave's neuritic whining sideways.

Mind you, they are/were real working class louts, so be prepared for a bit of queer'n'Commie bashing.

PRISM

Prism (EMI International)

THE SORT of mainstream early '70s rock for which no one will feel nostalgic. "A giant leap for rock 'n' roll, but it's too much for just one man," goes "Spaceship Superstar" (sic) before a whole slew of galactic clichés come roaring at you lyrically and musically (the bleeping synthesisers take care of that).

Ron Tahak's conventional oooonh-ah vocals are firmly rooted in the rock-pop school of shouters and the competence of the quintet behind him is nothing.

"Being on the road leaves you so uninspired," goes another song — yeah, it sure do show. Recorded in Vancouver, dumped in London.

ROKOTTO

Rokotto (State)

SUB-SATURDAY Night

the contents.

DAN HILL

Longer Fuse (20th Century)

YOUNG MR Hill shares one thing with fellow Canadian songwriter Bruce Cockburn — an attractively vulnerable timbre. There the similarity ends because Hill lacks Cockburn's concise vision and cutting edge.

Sentimental arrangements swamp his banal love songs and clichéd observations, which sound like a horrible cross between Elton John's early crass romanticism and Cat Stevens' fey ditties for college girls in bed.

The album's hit, "Sometimes When We Touch", is a good example of Hill's rare ability to attract with his pleasing voice and melodic sense whilst simultaneously repelling by use of syrupy strings over the soppy slop he sings.

LEIF GARRETT
Leif Garrett (Atlantic)

NO ONE gives a toss if the appallingly wholesome Leif Garrett pits the sweetness of his 16 years against rotten old Dion DiMucci and Paul Anka songs but when his weedy pipes attempt to get to grips with classics like "California Girls" and, even worse, "Johnny B. Goode" then the time has come to put the twerp in his place — which, by the sound of this sacrilege, is in Chuck Berry's dressing room just after Chuck has been told the promoters have done a bunk.

God forbid that Californian kids think this is actually rock and roll but then again they're stupid enough to swallow most substitutes.

CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE THIRD KIND
Original Soundtrack (Arista)

With kleptomaniac insistence, film composer John Williams continues to plunder the classics as the basis for his hack scores. Since Jaws — the ominous theme for which Williams borrowed from Bernard Herrmann's Psycho, itself a score freely adapted from the heavily rhythmic sections of Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring" — he has been Hollywood's hottest music property, going on to compose Star Wars (tricky old-fashioned romantic score [a mix of Walton, Holst and Elgar pastiches]) and now Close Encounters.

Director Steven Spielberg calls the music "A serious symphonic achievement, timeless and without restraints." Which is patent rubbish. This time around, Williams lifts from Bruckner and Wagner — the film's content is heavier, see — and even cheekily plunks a bit of Ligeti (so brilliantly utilised by Kubrick, in 2007) in the middle.

Never mind, when the movie moguls cotton on he can always flog his Oscars.

ISAAC HAYES
Chronicle (Stax)
New Horizon (Polydor)

THE OPENING sequence of Shaft, Richard Roundtree crossing a busy New York street and the giving the finger to an impatient driver, accompanied on the soundtrack by the fuzzy wah-wah, insistent hi-hat and descendant piano chord, is one of the all-time great movie moments.

Even the intrusive brass can't spoil it, but as soon as Isaac Hayes opened his mouth (Who's the black private dick who's a sex machine to all the chicks?) the magic was lost and the film continued in disappointingly muddled vein.

Still, if for nothing else, we have Hayes to thank for the plethora of 'funky' cop TV/film themes. Besides that dubious honour, the "Chronicle" compilation reminds us that he had a predilection for taking contemporary 'standards' like "Walk On By" and "By The Time I Get To Phoenix" and turning them into egotistic monologues which even here in their truncated versions sound bloated.

Aside from "Stranger In Paradise" (yes, the dopey "Take My Hand/Lost In A Wonderland" one) everything — all four remaining tracks — on "New Horizon" is his own work, down to the playing of keyboards and assorted percussion. And it's the horrendously elongated mixture

Hmm, maybe we pigs should eat meat more often

HOT CHOCOLATE
Every 1's A Winner (RAK)

IF YOU'RE going to work in the black-white-pink-brown field of disco-pop-rock-soul, give me Hot Chocolate over the Gibb brothers every day.

At least they understand that the form requires a modicum of balls, top-heavy bass at the very least, and in writer-singer Errol Brown have someone who can carry the can with a degree of conviction.

The two hits — "Put Your Love In Me" and the title track — sound as good here as they do thumping out of the pub juke box, or wherever. The rest is far from tasteless filler.

SAMANTHA SANG
Emotion (Private Stock)

ANAEMIC DISCO-POP, pitched slightly breathier (and, believe it or not, lower) than The Bee Gees, who contribute three numbers — and that sure sounds like Barry G. tarring up the title track. Thin as gossamer and about as substantial, "Emotion" floats off your turntable and clings desperately to the walls, papered or not.

Samantha may well have sang but no one actually listened.

PEARL
Pearl (London)

SISTERS LESLIE and Debbie Pearl ain't the McGarrigles. They ain't even the Beverleys.

Leslie's the writer, Debbie's the singer and these ten songs are extraordinary only by virtue of their ordinariness. Everything's been done by the book (Dean Parks on guitar, Russ Kunkel on drums, Norman Seef on camera) but "Pearl" remains an ill-fated foray into the murky pop-soul realm.

WHA-KOO
Berkshire (ABC)

VOCALIST DAVID Palmer sang sweetly (far too sweetly) on Steely Dan's debut album and now he's fronting this septet of Great Pretenders.

Palmer writes the words, guitarist Danny Dornia does the tunes (mostly) and the overall effect is of derisory deja-vu: smart-arse lyrics (as exemplified by the title track) allied to clever-clever rhythms. Becker and Fagen would've chuckled out this lot along with the "Aja" rejects.

TOMPALL GLASER
The Wonder Of It All (ABC)

A BEARDED buiser with an unlikely smooth Perry Como-like burr, Tompall Glaser sings straight C&W songs which are not so much hard-assed shirkers as soft-bellied shirkers.

Most of the numbers are by Bill Chappell — including the best, "Drinking Them Beers" ("Last night I had a little talk with myself/Just me and me, man to man/I said 'Self, you'll ruin yourself/They say alcohol can cook your brain'") — although Glaser also manages to make Mickey Newbury's fine "How I Love Them Old Songs" sound quite ordinary.

All the ingredients and the right cast list (a few beers, a saintly mother, a waitress in a greasy diner) are here but overall it's faintly glossy country, like it was tarted up for supper clubs or prime time TV.

EDDIE RABBITT
Rabbit (Elektra)

AT LEAST Mr Rabbit writes his own songs (alone or with producer David Malloy and Elektra warren-mate Even Stevens), but unfortunately they're a part of the 'new' Nashville which has had its admirably gritty origins eroded by a profusion of LA 'cowboys' infiltrating there, resulting in a MOR-ish sound of which you'd like to hear less.

The only song here to compare with the likes of Waylon, Willy or the redoubtable Mr Cash is the unashamedly tears-in-the-beer "Is There A Country Song On The Jukebox?" — which is something you can't hear when you're fully loaded and half-cocked.

I CAN'T GET NO SATISFACTION!

ONE KNOWS

The residents released their SATISFACTION in 1976. It was immediately acclaimed as the most extreme and intense record ever recorded, a pre-punk masterpiece. The demand has since grown for this record to the point where people can no longer be denied the painful pleasure of hearing and owning this startling record, which Andy Gill of NEW MUSICAL EXPRESS called, "... probably my favorite 45 of all time.", and Jim Green of TROUSER PRESS flatly stated, "... the most determinedly repellent music I've ever heard ...".

Obviously not a record for the faint hearted. So the question remains, Are you too yellow today for a record that was recorded two years ago? Hmmm?

Who loves the National Front?

You'd be surprised. We asked a cross-section of young people in one of London's inner-city areas. And we came up with some very disturbing answers — no fewer than 1 in 4 were active supporters of the National Front or were largely sympathetic. Another 1 in 4 hated the Front.

We also asked their views on race, repatriation, unemployment, politicians, mugging, demos.

After analysing their replies, we have produced a portrait of the young National Front sympathisers who will bring their influence to bear on the next general election.

HI-FI

First, however, a few specifications:
Amplifier power output: 10W rms per channel.

Tuner wavebands: FM (87.5 MHz — 108MHz), MW (525KHz — 1,605KHz), SW (5.9 MHz — 16 MHz), LW (150 KHz — 340 KHz).

FM frequency response: 20Hz — 15,000Hz.
Tuner sensitivity (IHF): 2.5 microvolts.
Cassette noise reduction: Dolby.

Turntable drive: Belt.
Speaker frequency response: 50 — 18,000Hz.

It seems that all hi-fi reviewers have personal quirks, and I'm no exception. Dunno if it's Freudian (!) but the very first thing I always check-out is the control panel.

What immediately impressed me was the way in which Aiwa had located the push-buttons, and also seen fit to install the cassette with a line of six oil-damped keys — meaning that, unlike most cassettes, you don't have to hit the keys so hard that you cause a tremor of Richter Scale proportions, with the possibility of ruining both stylus and record. Accordingly all those irritating clicks and clacks are vanquished. Tres bleedin' smooth!!

As for the cassette deck itself, the VU meters, record level faders and tape selector (Cr02Fe-Cr/LH) are all elegantly elevated for easy use.

Seeing as Aiwa offer synchronised disc-to-tape/radio-to-tape facilities it was child's play to continually switch from one to another operation and back again before relaxing and comparing the quality of the playback.

As a check I tuned into The John Peel Show (the Phased Locked Loop integrated circuit on the FM band ensuring stability) and also played four contrasting albums: Elvis Costello's "This Year's Model", Bob Marley's "Kaya", The Bee Gees' "Saturday Night Fever" and "The Hope & Anchor Front Row Festival".

Furthermore, seeing as the Aiwa AF 5050 comes with a set of SC-50 speakers, for once I refrained from using my Celestion Dilton speaker stack (my yardstick through which I test all hardware) and tested this music-centre as nature intended.

With compact bookshelf/wall mounted speakers (clips provided), the SC-50s — considering their dimensions (8 1/2" x 13" x 8 1/4") — proved to be more than adequate for the job. I was quite surprised that such small speakers could produce such quality. They offered good stereo separation and placement and minimum distortion. And to help make the reproduction compatible with room acoustics, a high-frequency level adjustment dial is fitted to the right of the 50mm tweeter and 160mm woofer in both speaker cabinets.

Only one slight criticism: I did feel that a slight improvement could be made on the bass slider, but taking into account that music-centres are primarily designed to appeal to those more interested in listening to the music than analysing the performance of the hardware, this is a minor quibble. The tonal quality of the AF5050 will probably satisfy most ears.

As I often find that cassette-corders and music-centres fall flat on the tape decks they install, I double-checked the AF5050 (using a standard pre-recorded commercial cassette — "The Average White Band With Ben E King" — and also with one I made up sometime ago specifically for test-runs). The playback was considerably better than that achieved by many of Aiwa's competitors.

Finally, I compared the recordings I made from disc-to-tape with the original vinyl, and was satisfied.

Aiwa are by no means the only company to promote up-market music-centres, but their AF5050 is a good unit by which to compare other modules. In fact, the other afternoon I spent a couple of hours in a West End showroom fiddling with various similarly-priced modules (to the annoyance of a salesman trying to do a quick-sale routine) and came away making notes to do test-runs on the Hitachi SDT-7710 and SDT-7675 — and in particular the Rotel RM-5010 and JVC MP-55LS.

A year ago, if anyone had asked me to recommend a music-centre I would have told them to avoid them like the plague. However, the last 12 months has been a noticeable improvement in performance. There are at least half-a-dozen models I'd give house-room to. With competition in the hi-fi world keener than ever before, hardware can only get better.

ON THE TOWN

Squeeze

NASHVILLE. YOU NEVER quite know what you're going to get from Squeeze.

I remember seeing them once about a year ago at the Brecknock, Camden Town, and after saying "This is a way of saying goodbye to history", Glenn Tilbrook broke into a powerful performance of Hendrix's "Red House".

Last time I saw them — a few months ago — at the Rochester, Stoke Newington, the p.a. blinked out just before the end of the set and they just left to pieces.

Perhaps they didn't really want to be there in the first place. But it would have been well within their ability to knock out an instrumental. Instead they finished with a row of dots. Manager Miles Copeland walks out appalled. Rightly.

Last Monday at the Nashville we got a pot-pourri of their own original rock numbers which — as you'll know if you've heard their "Packets Of Three" EP — is fast, greasy and exciting, plus some of their newer stuff from their recent (first) album, notably their "Strong In Reason" which seems to be about bodybuilding (Schwarzeneggeresque) — and in the middle of it all the old Ray Charles number "Mess Around" with keyboard man and R&B enthusiast Joels Holland stepping out front.

Weirdness of all however is the heavy disco workout towards the end of the evening. I didn't realise that musicians actually played disco. I thought it was just an incidental spin-off from the aero-space programme.

Manager Copeland standing near the back starts to twitch. But it's O.K. I mean, it was exciting. Sporadic pogoing breaks out. They've pulled it off. The whys and wherefores must be left to serious rock critics.

But it has to be said. There are three forces in this band, two of them pulling in different — though not necessarily irreconcilable — directions.

In the red corner Chris Difford (rhythm guitar, vocals, lyrics) somewhat under the influence of Lou Reed Warhol/New York punk medium-rare weird-out. In the blue corner the romantic Glenn Tilbrook (lead guitar, lead vocal, tunes) who loves Hendrix & Nils Lofgren and has a sheaf of blues/ballad stuff to make a song-publisher weep.

Somewhere in the middle, I guess, stands the modest Joels who'll turn his hand to whatever.

Now, maybe there's a contradiction here and maybe not. Maybe if they paved the entire set correctly and in the right order, you wouldn't see the glue.

But when Tilbrook is about to perform his (very fine) "Heartbreak" number and Difford prefaces it with some remarks about plastic penises (I think that's what he said), then the audience is led into down night confusion.

Okay, so punks are embarrassed by emotion (unless it's super-macho hatred, or intellectually-respectable disdain — snobbery to you, John) but Squeeze never had much punk credibility anyway 'cos they played too well — so who needs it?

Besides, if punks are looking for truth, they'll have to learn to take the smooth with the rough. And to distinguish between sentiment and sentimentality.

Squeezes the Pulse beat

Steel Pulse ROUNDDHOUSE

IT SEEMED strangely appropriate that a British reggae band should headline at, and virtually sell out, a major rock venue the week before this Sunday's massive Carnival Against the Nazis.

And with this Roundhouse triumph and a single on the verge of the chart, Steel Pulse are the living proof that British reggae finally seems to have arrived in a big way.

The audience was unexpectedly Hard Core punk — many of whom seemed to be there as much for the pose as the actual music (never mind the riddim, luv, just watch yer don't smudge me Black-Star Eyeliner).

Steel Pulse, like many of the home-grown roots reggae bands, still suffer from an identity crisis. As someone once said to me at a Black Slate gig "They sing a Bob Marley song like Bob Marley and a Ken Boothe song like Ken Boothe".

Still, despite sound problems on stage and a set which seems to be cut prematurely short, there were signs that the forthcoming "Handsworth Revolution" album is going to get a lot more people moving towards the Pulsebeat.

Visually they are imposing — vocalists Fonso Martin and Michael Riley decked out in preacherman togs and David Hinds in stencilled HM Prisoner gear.

And if the band are laid back, even for reggae — and thus not as easy to dance to as others — their great strength is the percussive power they wield. Meaty drummer Steve Nesbitt is at the core of some of the most subtle rhythmic twists and turns I've heard in a long while.

Noticeable by its absence was their excellent one-off single for Anchor, "Nyah Love", but the encore was the inevitable "Ku Klux Klan": the white hoods donned by the singers as they returned to the stage remaining as frighteningly powerful a visual ace as the first time I saw the band last year.

The Police opened the evening's proceedings and somehow I don't think A&M have gambled as inspiredly with this aging bunch, who last year backed Cherry Vanilla, as they did with Squeeze. (see left).

Classic handbaggers, their leather jackets and pen-ride jobs are just a thin veneer disguising well-played, cliché-ridden Heavy Metal rock.

It's one thing being solid, boys, another altogether being dense.

I'd often wondered when, if ever, John Cooper Clarke was going to go down as well with a London crowd as he does in his native Manchester. Even at last month's Buzzcocks Lyceum bash, our one and only Beat Poet had to fight a stream of abuse and a glass with shattered horrifyingly inches in front of him.

But, at the Roundhouse, he went down the proverbial stomp.

Twitching and stamping nervously behind those impenetrable black shades, Johnny recited a testimony that proved poetry isn't only something you stock the shelves with in libraries (or something in the sole possession of Patti Smith, either).

"The Monster From Outer Space", "Bronzed Adonis" and others are already being greeted like the hits they deserve to be.

"He makes love like a footballer — He dribbles before he shoots", was just one line that stood out from a never piece.

Over twenty minutes, he provided an entertaining interlude, though it's not the stuff of which headlines are made.

Adrian Thrills

The entertainment spectrum. Above, two bands apparently suffering, though overcoming, internal crises of identity: (Top) the distinct forces in Squeeze, Chris Difford and Glenn Tilbrook, and (above) Steel Pulse. The Commodores (below) just keep on with the job of taking it to the masses. Note, incidentally, how the trend for self-advertisement at gigs gathers pace. The Commodores HAMMERSMITH ODEON

I SUPPOSE it figures that The Commodores, currently vying with Earth Wind And Fire for the position of America's number one black act, think of themselves as a rock 'n' roll band.

After all, their idea of presentation has a lot in common with numerous rock bands. For starters, there's the snippet of grandiose classical music which is pumped through the PA to herald their arrival, the use of a mirror-ball, explosions, etc, etc.

As yet, there's no dry ice or lasers (or levitation stunts, something which EWAF specialise in). But judging from The Commodores' love of spectacle, now more in evidence than a year ago, that will only be a matter of time.

Still, much of what the band do to present themselves to their enraptured audience (the teenage whites outnumber the older blacks) is old hat for black acts.

How many rock acts are there urging the audience to clap their hands before they are even into their second number?

And when did you last see a white rock band divide the audience down the middle and have each side 'compete' in a "Who can sing the loudest" contest?

And The Commodores' dance routines, disappointingly sloppy (still, they have been performing substantially the same act for a year), are as alien to a rock band as forgoing the encore ritual, something which The Commodores did.

The Commodores are a six-piece outfit, augmented by The Mean Machine — three horns and one guitar, one of whom doubles for Commodores' drummer Walter Orange, and who — it must be stated — proved a far harder anchor for the band than Orange himself.

In fact, having little knowledge of The Commodores, other than their considerable reputation, I was expecting something a little more musically resilient than was provided.

Surely The Commodores are a funky band, lots of fretboard defying bass and teeth clenching drums — something to "get down" with.

For my money, the only time The Commodores even began to flex their muscle was during the closing "Brick House", an allusion, so I'm assured, to a much sought-after region of the female anatomy.

No, it's not The Commodores' playing that has got them where they are today.

It's their material, much of which fits safely into the FM radio mould, and which, on stage, The Commodores-squeeze every last drop from — sometimes extending arrangements when they just don't merit it.

"Easy", which Lionel Richie performs on a white concert piano positioned stage-centre and perched above the rest of their equipment, and "Just To Be Close To You" were both over-extended, guitarists Thomas McClary, who's unheard most of the time, making a right brio of himself during his solo on "Easy", posing to a ridiculous extreme.

In time-honoured fashion The Commodores wind their way to the end of their set by introducing each member of the band — these introductions also detail each Commodores' birth sign — before a sharp-suited MC skids onto the stage and calls an end to the proceedings.

Get the picture? There's nothing wrong with the act utilising presentation devices to maximum effect, but it seems to me that The Commodores are now concentrating on the form to the detriment of content.

True, they worked hard and efficiently, working the audience up into the desired state of euphoria with manipulative ease, but ultimately The Commodores' success only as entertainers, and nothing more.

I wonder how many of their audience, a largely white audience, were actually moved by their performance.

Not very many, I guess.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL

OL' GRAVEL voice is back. And I'd been dreading it — anticipating "An Evening with Kris and Rita", going straight for the Star is Born crowd with a star a look back over his shoulder.

Mind you, with seat prices at £10, you'd almost expect to be on stage with them.

However, The World's Most Eligible Male strolled out on stage looking relaxed and — dammit — as handsome as his photos, exuding the sort of charisma which, if bottled, would put Faberge out of business.

For the fashion conscious among you, he was dressed in a flowing white shirt, brown cords and did not have a beard!

Two minutes into his set any lingering doubts were dispelled.

A strong medley of "Loving Her Was Easier", the majestic "Sunday Morning Coming Down" and "Silver Tongued Devil" and he was away.

Despite an uninspiring backing from two guitars, keyboards, bass and drums Kristofferson sailed through a collection of his best material, including the touching and sensual "Casey's Last Ride", "Jody And The Kid" and probably the best track from his new album, "Sabre And The Rose".

"Living Legend" and "Spooky Lady's Revenge" — from "Easter Island" — came on strong, but the remainder was so damned relaxed that at times it verged on the somnambulist.

After the interval it was Rita's turn. She proceeded very cautiously through her hit singles — but things livened up when jazz pianist Barbara Carey came on to join her, and rattled the 88s in the manner born on "Fever" and "For the Good Times".

PICTURE: TOM SHEEHAN

Mrs. Kristofferson remained stage centre throughout the evening and laid on an accomplished if unexciting set with about as much animation as Open Night at Madame Tussaud's. On "Higher And Higher" which seemed marginally shorter than Roots we witnessed a pretty light show flitting round the Hall, and everyone started clapping along.

Now Kris and Rita together. They sang "Last Goodbye Together", "You Show Me Yours (And I'll Show You Mine)" — during which cryptic references were made to those infamous Kristofferson pics taken during "The Sailor Who Felt On Top of Sarah Miles" — "Help Me Make It Through The Night", and finished with the ultimate road song, our old friend "Bobby McGee".

"Thank you, God bless off for, what, 25 seconds, and back into "I Fought The Law", which was a distinct improvement on the "Natural Act" version.

Well, for your money you got a three hour show that was basically three shows together — Kris, Rita and Kris'n'Rita together, I could have done without her altogether, but in terms of credibility her old man's doing fine. Hell of a writer, good looking too, hasn't even got a bad voice. Same time next year?

Patrick Humphries

Siouxsie And The Banshees

MUSIC MACHINE, LONDON

A PEACE-offering of flowers from a fan in the dressing-room and what seems like the millionth debut for the great unsigned.

Yeah, you've probably heard all of this before with regard to The Banshees, but tonight's advance ticket sales were only out-done by The Tom Robinson Band when they appeared at the same venue recently.

A full-scale attraction without a contract!

Off-beat combo The Table deviate just for the sake of it and the redoubtable Spizz Oil harangues the audience to a standstill, but both he and the tabloid-trio end up sinking without a trace in the mire of anticipation. Tonight belongs to the headliners.

The Banshees take the stage in a twilight of blue spotlights, crystalline, dissonant guitar splinters heralding the intro to "Helter Skelter", a song that's been in their repertoire for nigh-on a year, but of which they acquit themselves with energy and enthusiasm, forestalling any bitterness they might feel for a blinkered and unresponsive industry with stoical perseverance.

"Mirage" follows, then "Nicotine". The crowd call for "Captain Scarlet" (still!) but the Banshees don't pander. Instead we get "Metal" and "Hong Kong Garden".

"This one's for all you A & R men at the bar."

Their mood becomes apocalyptic.

Remaining still is the primeval, anchor-beat of the drum sound, over which the Bromley chanteuse pins her starched, catalonic vocalise. Between these two extremes the guitars cover the middle-ground.

Mixers and P.A.s permitting they steer well clear of post 77 wall-of-sound conformity, every instrument maintaining an identity of its own in the overall sound pattern.

And so a band who started life as a 'ragged and naive' figment of post-Pistols' punk euphoria, develop through experience into a force to be reckoned with. Possibly not esoteric enough for 'New Music' snobs and dilettantes to drool over, certainly not dumb enough for the boneheads, The Banshees may find themselves lost in limbo unless they surface in this year's vinyl-stakes. But I see no reason why not.

Though this show was muzzled by bad sound they proved themselves capable of delivering the goods (as they say in the business) and their ability as songwriters cannot be doubted as recent material like "Overground" and "Suburban Relapse" goes to show.

As Siouxsie says, "Here's something for all the record companies 'cos it's their loss not ours."

It's time someone listened.

JOHN BULL, CHISWICK

EVERY NIGHT is music night at the John Bull, fast establishing itself as the biggest little venue west of West One. This evening it's the turn of The Warm Jets, a four-man popster-rock outfit celebrating, we're told, their fifth anniversary together.

And not half bad they're not, neither. The songs are all kept inside the three-minute limit and really are songs, individual in character, not just separate slabs of a single, extended entity. Stand-out titles include "Cool School" and the quasi-epic "Queen Of The Nile".

Image-wise, you'd hesitate to drop the boys into any of the several bags currently at our disposal. Lead, bass and drums are all well looked after by three low-profile types while the vocalist is wont to writhe about proclaiming, from somewhere out the side of his face, "I feel strange, I feel deranged!"

He's really neither, of course, and looked more comfortable in the anorak and flares he arrived with than the '60s second-hands assumed for the stage. Still, the deception is kept light and humour outweighs psychosis.

Musically the point of departure is possibly the poppier side of Razy Music. Indeed the group's name carries Eno-esque connotations and the frontman frequently gives an overwhelming impression of a warble through old B.F.'s tonsils.

If the Warm Jets can purge themselves of such tedious influences and push their own well-developed creative abilities to the fore, as evidenced in "Computer Love" and "Suspended In Space" then maybe there are Bigger Things in store. I hope so.

As for the John Bull, it's a crass cross between pub and boe-down barn building. Likely as not your view's obscured by a fibreglass cartwheel. But what of it. With free and regular entertainment of The Warm Jets' calibre it does a lot to render one chunk of London a little more liveable-in.

Sound International will show you how to mix it.

Sound International is a new monthly magazine for those amongst us who're interested in music (and that means both playing and recording).

We'll be checking out all sorts of musical things, chatting to producers and getting heavily into the technical side of recording and playing.

In the first issue there's an interview with Gus Dudgeon who, characteristically, alludes to the staff of record companies as being accomplished five-knuckle shufflers and very little else.

We'll also be going into the problems you'll experience when you try to set up a new studio. Is that multi-harmonic noise gate vocoder flanger ADT gizmo really that necessary?

Amongst other regular features, we'll be looking at rhythm sections, kicking off with Be Bop Deluxe.

Also covered will be desks and, of course, the famous Mouligrind Mixer which does wonderful omelettes as well as passable masters. (This remarkable gadget is featured right and can be custom built to your specifications.)

Mainly though we'll be telling you a few things you didn't know, confirming a few pre-judices and shattering a few old idols.

So why don't you zip on down to your friendly neighbourhood noise agent and get together with Sound International 50p. — At 50p it's hardly a ripoff.

If you have any problems trying to get hold of a copy of Sound International, write or phone: Sales Department, Link House Publications, Link House, Dingwall Avenue, Croydon. 01-686 2599.

Learning to love a man on the fiddle

Papa John Creach

THE OTHER END, NYC.

NEVER DID see or care about Jefferson This or Jefferson That or Hot Whatever. Heard one or two of their records, yawned a lot, moved quickly on to other things.

Seems like I might have overlooked at least one vital spark in their schemes. Namely this sprightly old dude, Papa John, who apparently spent a few years lending his masterly violin playing to the Tuna Airship's career.

First time I heard him was last year, when DJM released his album "The Cat And The Fiddle". Can't say I was impressed. A case of the right string but the wrong yo yo, it seemed to me. However, Papa John in person is a whole different box of tricks.

Not for nothing did I check his act two nights running. The first time I was drawn to The Other End by invitation; the second I was there off my own bat, strictly for the fun of it. Had not he and I been leaving the city after the second night to go our different ways I'd have probably gone to see him a couple more times; he and his band were that enjoyable.

Defying any neat kind of categorization, Papa John's act is as eclectic as they come, the natural result of a long and diverse career which has led him from speakeasy to concert hall, from vaudeville through jazz to rock 'n' roll, from tie 'n' tails lounges to blues 'n' booze juke-joints and back again. It's all the same to this man, so long as he can play his fiddle, make a few people happy and make a few bucks.

Right now he's the linchpin of a rockin' sextet who are as comfortable with funk as they are with blues or with straight ahead boogie, especially strengthened by the lead guitarist / occasional lead singer (whose name escaped me) who has apparently just come to John from Jerry Jeff Walker's band.

The glorious version of "The Thrill Is Gone" that he and 'Pops' put together was one of the main reasons I returned for a second helping. If Lonnie Mack and Sugar cane Harris ever teamed up they'd probably sound much the same as this duo.

At the other edge of his repertoire, this lanky, slightly stooped but immensely joyful character was equally entertaining leading plaintive, instrumental versions of "Danny Boy" and "Somewhere Over The Rainbow"; two songs that would normally leave me cringing but in fact had me enthralled, thanks to his sensitive control over his electrified, and electrifying, instrument.

Usually I'm no great lover of the violin and I've no way of judging how his talent ranks alongside the Stephane Grappellys or Yehudi Menuhins of this world; all I can say is, as was once said of another virtuoso, Cal can play.

Aside from a faithful interpretation of Grover Washington's "Mister Magic", the balance of the set was made up of songs from the DJM album (including the

Suzi Quatro
MUSIC MACHINE,
LONDON

A VERY HIP occasion this — Generation X and the Shepherds Bush half of the Pistols all down checking on pop roots credibility, or maybe a return to the womb of nostalgia, the hazy 'daze' of '73 when Chapman-Chinn held sway over the complacency stakes.

Suzi Quatro, one time "teenage rebel of the week" and uncrowned "Queen Of Noise" when The Runaways were still knee-high to Rodney Blingheim, is currently riding high on the National charts with the Chapman-Chinn penned, Smoke hand-me-down "If You Can't Give Me Love".

Whatever happened to my adolescent fantasy? The elfin rocker who didn't have a date with a tree?

I think she's stayed the same; it's just me that's changed.

Ms Quatro struts her stuff in true, traditional style, flanked by moronic, leather-clad muscle, although Suzi herself has forsaken her own leathers Sunshine Band-styled "Let's Get Dancing" and a couple of hard rockers), all of which were infinitely better on stage than they are on record — the atmosphere at The Other End being a good deal livelier than the production and mix achieved in the studio. Perhaps next time they should cut him live.

"Here's a toon 'er' all the GIRLS out there... she yells before rocking out on "The Wild One."

"Here's a toon' I fell in love with so I just hadda record it..." she announces before doing a version of "Breakdown" by Tom Petty.

"Here's a toon'..." etc. Several yawns later they come up with the goods we've all been waiting for: "Our first hit was back in '73, 'Can The Can'."

The crowd goes wild; they follow this with "Devil Gate Drive", the current single and an encore of "Sweet Little Rock 'n' Roller".

She handles the audience in tried and true style, "Y'all put yer' hands together now...!" Call and response interludes, bass solos, drum solos.

Cliches, cliches, but that's what entertainment's all about and the audience loves it.

"If y'all really rock 'n' roll y' never get any older...!"

Huh! La grande illusion.

Still, Suzi hasn't been in the business all these years to get slugged by a punk like me; on the other hand I ain't alive to listen to product especially when it's as corny as this.

All it did was to take me back to Patti Smith at the Rainbow a few weeks back. Both artists are into the same kind of jerk-off outdated rock 'n' roll fantasies; it's just the nature of the product that's different.

Cafe Jacques

EDINBURGH

WHAT WITH production hassles and record company hold ups it's taken Cafe Jacques nearly two years after putting pen to paper to really get under way on a national scale.

Many thought their chance had passed, especially with the advent of the New Wave, but instead time has proved to be on their side. The long apprenticeship has produced a mature and strong debut album in "Round The Back", which is currently nudging the Top Hundred albums in the States though they have yet to set foot there.

"What used to be called progressive music," Paul Rambali termed it in his review. In fact it's very difficult to neatly pigeonhole Cafe Jacques' music — a good sign because it means it's original.

Most of the set is their own work, except for Bobby Bland's "Heart Of The City" and Little Feat's "Spanish Moon", which give you something of a taste of their own style. Packed with the subtle touches of 'progressive' music — though solos are short and the point — the music owes as much to the choppy rhythms of funk as it does to the tuneful flow of rock.

Guitarist Chris Thomson and keyboard player Pete Veitch are the main songwriting axis, though drummer Mike Ogilvie's "Meaningless" is a feature of the set.

Ogilvie makes his presence felt throughout, in fact, with some very upfront and percussive drumming. It's one of two immediate features — the other being Chris Thomson's gritty vocals — which add to the distinctiveness of Cafe Jacques.

Best of all, Cafe Jacques have suddenly found some confidence from somewhere, and it makes all the difference to their work, lending just the right amount of aggression and authority to their playing.

Rhythmic enough to be instant, melodic enough to stay with you, Cafe Jacques' originality will be with us for quite some time. Do yourself a favour and get in at the beginning with their current British and European tour upcoming.

Good work too from support band Nightshift, whose energetic boogie had the dance floor well populated throughout. Their material tends to be a bit one-paced at the moment, but I suspect that the real strong point of this three-piece is in the studio making good singles. "Dance" would do very well for starters and you could be hearing a lot of this band on your radios this summer. Well worth checking.

Radiators fail to warm venue

The Radiators From Space

CHANCELLOR HALL, CHELMSFORD

THE ONE point this gig proved is that if a band provoke no reaction from their audience, then the gig is bound to be flat and unexciting. It hardly matters whether it's a positive or negative reaction — I've seen quite a few bands play well in the face of a hostile crowd — so long as the band have some feed-back to inspire them.

In other words, it's that familiar maxim which states that apathy is the worst enemy — as the Radiators found out here.

Lack of publicity for the gig ensured a poor turn-out — a typically apathetic Chelmsford audience (remember City Rock?) of a hundred or so for this, which, they said, was their first gig in four weeks.

The ambience of the Chancellor Hall didn't help matters — a large, clean, and modern hall with a high roof does not a good rock 'n' roll venue make — so the Radiators eventually gave up trying to goad the audience into action.

Not the best of conditions to see a band under, so I guess they deserve the benefit of some doubt, but in the first half of the set — which consisted mostly of songs from the "TV Tube Heart" album — they came on like watered-down Clash. No fun.

Thankfully, the second half saw them improve; the material from their forthcoming second album, produced by Tony Visconti, was stronger, and they gave warning that, despite their dreadful moniker (sounds like the title of a Hawkwind album — hope they have a good reason for it), they're a band to watch.

Drummer Jimmy Crashe is quite a small guy but he's built like a weight-lifter and plays with the kind of power associated with that profession, while his partner Mark Megaray plays like Bruce Foxton, which is a compliment indeed.

All three of the front line sing, so their vocals have plenty of depth — an asset that is well used on their new and

Then they left the stage to Saints with brass show promise

The Saints DINGWALLS

WHILE THE more notorious new wave acts have been surrounding themselves with publicity, praise and minor hits, together with the annoying trappings of stardom, like fans and money, a lot of people have been waiting for something new.

Not a rejection of punk but a consolidation of the captured ground which is already beginning to slip away again. Like, what about all these new directions that the new wave was supposed to generate? Some bands are finding their way without any trouble; the rest seem to be falling into the limited categories of hot pop, cold noise and more punk.

One group who've been making cautious but steady progress without the press drooling over their every pioneering step are The Saints.

Nothing unique or even fashionable; they've worked a web of bright, punchy brass arrangements into their set without cutting any of their power as a hard-driving rock group. The brass is different in the current musical climate, but more significantly, the care they've taken to ensure it isn't just a gimmick together with the new material they've been producing has given them the upper hand.

They've broken down their own barriers, now they can choose the next move.

And The Saints can cut it on stage, although they haven't managed to maintain a regular brass section on the road (it depends who's available for the trumpet and two-sax line-up). But they're also comparatively inexperienced and haven't quite managed to blend their own raucous approach perfectly with the extra musicians in a live environment.

In other words, some nights it sounds off.

It's a good sound for the long labyrinth of Dingwalls, though, and the three brassmen tonight know the material. The audience comprises a bunch of faithfuls up the front and a horde of those who prefer to sit and stare.

A top-speed opening salvo: "Lost And Found", "River Deep Mountain High", then the bow-tied brass appear, to some audience incredulity, for "No Time".

Much of the set is taken from the new album — "This Perfect Day", "A Minor Aversion", the single "Know Your Product" and the sneering anthem "Orstralia".

The audience are either dead or deaf and Chris Bailey, shaggy vocalist, feigns sleep against a convenient pillar. Bassist Alasdair Ward strolls along the front of the stage beaming a disarming smile at the uncertain crowd.

"Stranded", "Demolition Girl", "Nights In Venice", with Ivor Hay hitting a steady beat behind Ed Kuepper's harsh, stabbing guitar, then suddenly they're gone and there's a long, confused silence.

What The Saints are doing isn't always easy on ears conditioned to twangy four-pieces with the occasional luxury of keyboards. At least they take the risk and when it works it's magic. Once the audience realised what was happening the applause demanded two encores, "Robot", "Poor Little Fool", "Louie Louie", and "Run Down".

There could have been a third; the band earned it even if the crowd didn't deserve it.

AUTOMATIC David Philp. Pic: ROB HALL

MARQUEE

WHEN POLAR opposites meet at the Marquee these days musical fashion goes on parade.

The Automatics, hard-driving pogo-punchers, began their summer residency with the flash and buzz of '77. The weekend punks liked it.

In contrast, a bunch of youngsters known as Apostrophe (the youngest being 14) started the night off with yet another Beatles-oriented act. In fact, they hardly played an original tune.

From "Mr. Moonlight" to "She Loves You" to The Searchers' classic "When You Walk In The Room", Apostrophe was pure Thames beat. A bit shy, the boys nevertheless displayed a lot of musicianship for their age and sang well. The punks couldn't have cared less (do only us old folks of 21 like The Beatles?).

With the arrival of The Automatics' visual rock 'n' roll flair leaps out. Lead singer David Philp, decked in the usual leopard and leather, cavorts with plenty of leer, affectation, and frenzied poise. Bobby Collins on bass and guitarist Wally Hacon stand cool and cocky, occasionally rating a Dolly comparison for their speedo flicks.

The star, though, is drummer Ricky Rocket. Off the boat from Kansas and into the rock press classifieds (whereby he joined The Automatics), Rocket has to be just about the hardest hitter around today (and that includes Cheap Trick's Ron E. Charles).

At times he jumps up from his stool for an extra wind-up and fastballs his sticks at the crowd when one of the year's fastest sets is over.

Unfortunately, the songs, though not bad, are not particularly memorable. The best is "Run Forever", "a sweet love song" on which Philp duets more (than just belt away and on which Collins and Hacon take a break from their all-out slashing for a few timely riffs.

A normal night down on Wardour Street.

Marcus Smith

Georgie Fame

THE TORRINGTON, FINCHLEY

IF YOU think Georgie Fame goes on forever, then who's this pushing his way through the crowd waiting to get into the packed Torrington on Sunday Night? Greyish hair, long and thinning, heavy body, Christ! It isn't really.

It's good to be able to see Fame and the Blues Flames playing small rooms like this. All the way from Flamingo in 1962 to Finchley 16 years on and the mixture of Jazz and blues is the same, picking up the same reference points along the way: Mose Allison, Oscar Brown Jr., Louis Jordan.

The band is, well, let's say loose, with Georgie cajoling them from behind the organ, making faces, pointing and doing his jungle noises, singing the riffs whenever the front line gets lost.

Fame has always picked good musicians and he's got Alan Skidmore and Malcolm Griffiths on horns. There's plenty of opportunity for them to stretch out and Griffiths' trombone is particularly impressive, driving and inventive, always exciting, responding to the power of a rhythm section that kicks and then

Yes, it is. Really. Huge frame behind a dwarfed kit, it's Tony Crombie, who ought to be a better-known legend of the British music scene than he is.

One of the leading modern drummers of the early '60s, he led one of our earliest rock groups, Tony Crombie and his Rockets, put together in '56 to combat the likes of Haley and his Comets.

He still hits the skins hard, sticks reversed, very loud, swings like hell and some of the figures he thunders through as the music clamours are simply thrilling.

"Yea! Yea!" sums it up. A long rap from Georgie in his Deep South drawl and then the song taken faster than the original, extended solos from Skidmore and Griffiths; Georgie's voice rising against the horns and finally Bernie Holland's upper register guitar solo leaping out over the top of it all.

With Brian Miller sitting in on electric piano for most of the second half, it's jazzier and looser than ever, but nobody minds. Certainly not Georgie, whose mood only varies from energetically happy to ecstatic. Ten minutes after closing time, he's dismissed the band, messed around on the organ and half-sung a version of "Everybody's Cryin' Mercy" and, despite his telling us to get our coats and leave him alone, no one's moving.

John Harvey

The Subs

CAMBUSLANG

THE SUBS are a youthful three-quarters Scottish-one-quarter Canadian band from Glasgow who, in case you hadn't noticed, have scored a deal with Stiff. Their insistent "Gimme Your Heart"/"Party Clothes" single has been selected for the honour of launching Stiff's One Off label but, despite the implication, the boys have at least more single lined up after that.

It's a coup that leads you to expect more than the band seems actually capable of producing — at present, anyway. The single is recommended, but live The Subs are a definite disappointment. And that's even allowing for a dire hired PA and for the unfortunate venue — a Radio Clyde roadshow in greater Glasgow, where their presence on stage for an hour is greeted by a total lack of interest from the disco pretty things.

But to be quite frank, however, there's really precious little for the permed ones to react to. A very young band — some 35 gigs under the belt and still pushed to pad the set out to the required hour — The Subs certainly have a lot to learn.

Boy have they got room for improvement! With nothing in particular to say, they're easily disheartened, skimming through the quick change bar chords with as much conviction and charisma as a sack of potatoes.

What few ideas of their own are injected into the undisciplined rush (under the banner, it turns out later, of not doing the obvious) come across as just plain incongruous, adding to the depressing general atmosphere of an unprepared band out of their depth.

Instant dismissal, though, is prevented by the second half of the set. As if by divine intervention, the songs lift themselves out of nothing to leave a definite promise for the future. Some riffs with a bit of zest, the odd tune breaking through and a hook chorus or two all combine to suggest better things will come. Till then, they would do well to take a hint or two from one song they play — The Who's "The Kids Are Alright" — about the use of economy and dynamics, the beneficial effects thereof.

The single has probably come too soon in the lives of The Subs and they've got delusions about their status. As long as no one kids them on they're something special — which they ain't — The Subs will probably lodge themselves in the Public's affections some time in the future as a useful rock band. Till then, what's needed is lots of hard work.

The Young Ones

MARQUEE

JOLLY, JELLYTOT pop. The Young Ones heralding a new glitter generation?

By today's standards this is a very unusual group. In front of a Saturday night Marquee crowd they aren't too popular either. Although their material — largely originals except a lively encore of "Substitute" — fulfils most of the criteria of groovy pop, it's difficult to dance to.

That may be just lack of familiarity, but it seemed more likely to be the disarming speed at which they were playing, distinctly medium-paced with little variation. You can't pogo or bang your head. You can nod a bit and get neck-ache.

They're relatively new and haven't yet mastered stage presence or pacing.

The most striking thing is the band's sartorial image, with bright, flashy shirts and trousers, bursts of colour. The guitar and bass bop cheerfully while the diminutive singer darts athletically, crouching and glinting like a spangled Barrie Masters.

There are keyboards as well, contributing to a smooth, mellow, undemanding sound. The material is generally love songs, well-constructed and tuneful, but — with the exception of the single "Rock 'n' Roll Radio" and "It's Goodbye Alright" — lacking in really powerful hooks.

The hipkids at the front aren't too sympathetic to Young Ones' rock and fob a few glasses to illustrate their disapproval. The band aren't yet up to handling that sort of scene and it didn't improve them at all.

If you find pop offensive forget this band. But they're obvious fodder for teenagers, jolly and Radio One.

If you feel differently, catch them next time round. They're still looking for a hard edge, the essential punch which makes it a live act rather than an exercise in quality pop. When they've found that you'll hear more.

Call them glitterheart; that'll upset people.

The main events of the week

IT'S ONE OF the busiest weeks of the year, in terms of new tours opening. No less than 12 big acts — including The Tubes, Jethro Tull, Elkie Brooks and the reformed Lindisfarne — set out on the trail during the next few days. Unfortunately we don't have enough space to feature them all pictorially, though we'll try to get around to most of them as the tours progress. Meanwhile, here's a listing of the new tours:

● THE TUBES bring their notorious rock extravaganza back to Britain for the whole of May, culminating in a full week in London at the end of the month. Meanwhile they kick off in the provinces at Bristol (Monday and Tuesday) and Brighton (Wednesday).

● JETHRO TULL make a welcome return to the British concert platform after a lengthy absence. Throughout their trek, they'll be playing the entire show themselves, and their first dates are at Edinburgh (Monday), Glasgow (Tuesday) and Manchester (Wednesday).

● ELKIE BROOKS is also doing the rounds for the whole of May, the highlight of her schedule being a week at the London Palladium. But prior to that, you can catch her at Liverpool (Sunday), Manchester (Monday), Sheffield (Tuesday) and Hull (Wednesday).

● LINDISFARNE are back in business again permanently, and you'll have read about their reformation in last week's NME. So all we need add right now is that their extensive comeback tour starts in Leeds on Wednesday, which is the first of 31 major dates.

● DON McLEAN is always a welcome visitor to these shores, and he kicks off his longest British tour to date with gigs in London (Monday) and Ipswich (Wednesday).

● RADIO STARS are back on the road again, soon after ending their marathon outing with the Hot Rods. They're playing a series of weekend shows, and the first of these takes them to Cambridge (Friday), Guildford (Saturday) and Hemel Hempstead (Sunday).

● THE PIRATES are another band who only recently finished touring, but now they're embarking on another 21 gigs in order to promote their new "Skeff Wars" album. You'll find them at Huddersfield (Friday), Birmingham (Saturday) and Oxford (Tuesday).

● THE MOTORS are in top gear, ready to zoom round the country. And their first ports of call are at Birmingham (Monday), Cardiff (Tuesday) and Oxford (Wednesday).

● U.K. are the new so-called supergroup comprising John Wetton, Eddie Jobson, Alan Holdsworth and Bill Bruford. They begin their debut tour at Southampton (Saturday), Hemel Hempstead (Sunday), Guildford (Monday) and Keele (Wednesday). Don't miss 'em!

● CLIMAX BLUES BAND, newly signed by WEA, play one of their rare British tours to promote their debut LP for their new label. It opens at London Lyceum on Wednesday.

● PERE UBU, the doyens of the Cleveland set, pay their first-ever visit to Britain this week. They're topping the bill at Manchester (Friday), Liverpool (Saturday) and Birmingham (Tuesday), as well as guesting with Graham Parker in London on Sunday and Monday.

● CHERRY VANILLA returns to the gig circuit to promote her new "Bad Girl" LP, her first gigs being at Edinburgh (Friday), Glasgow (Saturday) and Redcar (Sunday).

● And on top of all those tours, there's a major one-off event on Thursday, when top American band FOREIGNER make their British debut in concert at London Rainbow.

Patrik Fitzgerald

SANDPIPER, NOTTINGHAM

IT WAS A nice idea in theory.

Two weeks back Fitzgerald came and supported Some Chicken, now he's back to headline the same band.

Except that it doesn't quite turn out like that. After considerable discussion, it's decided to keep the bill the same as before, a decision which proves to be prudent.

Fitzgerald has a lot of guts. To go out with just an acoustic box and face an unfamiliar audience only really there for the local favourites takes true nerve, all the more difficult when your vocal mike breaks down midway.

As he performed his set of witty, often bitter ("Sound Of My Street") songs and three poem-cum-stories, he was beset by a veritable hubbub of exasperated chit-chat from the half of the audience who had decided not to bother listening to him.

Those making the effort found themselves becoming slowly immersed in his little vignettes and scenarios, and by the end he had completely endeared himself to those around the stage.

I suppose it was also encouraging to notice that the general noise level had dropped as well.

He's an immensely likeable character, standing there in his wooden jockey cap and rag-tag clothes, observing with amusing accuracy the people and situations around him.

He's almost the kind of figure a modern-day Dickens might have invented, the twist being that in this case it's the character who tells the story.

There's no contrived sloganising with this bloke. His "politics" are so genuine, so straight from the heart, that it probably doesn't matter that he goes over the top on occasion, or that sometimes he tends to offer no solutions, only problems.

The audience know what he means, and since they aren't about to get coldly critical of his flimsy philosophy, neither am I.

Most of the songs are simply specific comments on situations familiar (at least by association) to any of us: "Small Record Company" ("We sold three records today!"). "Reject" ("I can't think of no more words for songs") and "When I Get Famous" ("I just want someone to love me").

As usual, the audience don't know whether to laugh or cry for "Jarvis", but on the other numbers it strikes me how easily, with enough exposure, they could all become sing-alongs.

He actually gets a fair accompaniment on "Safety Pin Stuck In My Heart", indicating that a surprising number of people must have bought that first EP.

Hopefully the same will happen for his second (another Small Wonder, due out shortly). He does all the songs from his bar "Little Dippers", which I was looking forward to hearing, but you can't have everything, and he did play all for other faves.

He came, saw and conquered — up to a point, which brings me back to my original observation.

It must be asked whether he can ever headline with complete success.

The very nature of the field in which he's chosen to have his say would seem to be against him, though I've seen people far less talented topping bills, so perhaps anything is possible.

THOSE OF US readers whose memories go further back than "This Years Model" may have smiled at the irony of the review of the second Television album: a tacky little Julie Burchill put-down job stuck at the foot of the Album Review page.

Nick Kent has conveniently ditched his previous year's model running up full page album reviews and centre page interviews on Elvis Costello. So Elvis Costello becomes the new Bob Dylan; Julie Burchill the new Jean Rook, and Tom Verlaine and band become No. 3 (Ramones and Blondie being Nos. 1 & 2 respectively) in that pretty pairs' continuing vendetta against the New York Wave in 1978. No doubt when Television come to tour the U.K. Tom Verlaine will be interviewed by Tony Parsons, and in true Bangian fashion, Verlaine will be finally revealed as one of the most despicable human beings still alive.

Julie Burchill has traded in the Nazi dyke pose for Tony Parsons' saving whales, existentialism and marching with the S.W.P. How this lady with her "everyone can be Famous For Fifteen minutes" fashionable posings, can put anyone down I don't know. She shows no shame. Nick Kent, for his part, should heed Dylan's warning and not let other people get his kicks for him.

In the future Elvis Costello will quite likely be passed over for a newer, faster more streamlined model — as bright young entrepreneur of the late '70s Jake Riviera is well aware in his saturation hype campaign, and Julie Burchill and Tony Parsons will expose the whole giant publicity sham.

Still, part of the achievement of David Bowie and Neil Young has been to come back after a period of intense critical acclaim, followed by equally vicious press hostility. Whether Verlaine and Costello have the ability to transcend the whole hyper-star charade remains to be seen.

This may be the New Wave era, the tide may have turned, but it's still the same old shit that comes ashore. ALEX RUSSELL, Insh, Aberdeenshire. Amusing, though, how many people manage to scramble aboard the raft, eh? — M.S.

SO THAT HUMBLE, self-effacing ego maniac Jordan thinks Gays are weak, eh?

Were the people who "zapped" the Evening News offices weak? Are the 5000 people who marched against the blasphemy laws and Mary Whitehouse weak? (Cos most of the people on that demo were Gays?)

Sure, in the interview that she had with Gay News Jordan attempted to be rude, but after being told where to get off in a style similar to her own she became, (Quote) "... as soft as margarine on hard bread. That comes from the G.N. interview itself and should anyone doubt it they can pick up a back issue of 136 and read it for themselves. Mind you, Jordan is not as world-weary and blasé about life as she would have you believe, there are still things which shock her. I mean, you should have seen her face and heard the silence when she was asked did she ever masturbate.

Now that the record is straight, I can go and be weak all over somebody else.

ALAN WALL, c/o Gay News

Pic: JOE STEVENS

Your host, the new improved Monty Smiff — no bottoms and not many rude answers.

Graphic by FRANCIS LAMB

THERE IS SO much good music around, so many good people and honest people, but so many self-styled shithouses wandering around like pantomime extras, masquerading in the name of punk rock and art. Namely that arty party "I started it all" twin Jordan.

Does she really believe she did start it all? Oh yes! Same as I started rockability and soul! All that berk did start was the war-painted, posey, money-making, commercial overpriced clothes, make-up and imagery brigade that ruined everything punk stood for. What was it Vivienne Westwood said in the Melody Maker (sorry) once? Oh yes: "When you are a punk you are an anarchist and when you are an anarchist you are a punk."

How many more anarchist outfits have you sold today Vivienne? What is it? "When you are a punk you are a punk and if you are a punk you must have been ripped off."

Surely, this is what John and the boys were against? Oh dear, what happened. Punk is dead, long live honesty. Bring back The Damned! WALTER WALL-CARPETING, Warrington, Cheshire. So no one likes Jordan much. So what's new? — M.S.

I FIND IT frightening that Julie Burchill, who is so overtly opposed to racial prejudice, should foster such a bitter hatred for the Middle Class. I can't see any difference between her idea of the attitude and nature of a middle-class person and the preconceptions of a fascist. Obviously in her eyes someone's character is still determined by the circumstances of their birth.

A. MENHENNET, Beckenham, Kent. Woops, so no one likes Julie much either, especially the ex. middle classes (don't suppose she'll lose any sleep over that). — M.S.

WELL, WELL, well. Aren't we clever little journalists then? What a bright idea to have a smug little Blackmail Corner tucked away in the cozy folds of your ingenious little "music" paper. What will you think of next?

Well... it's ever such a pity to see Debby Harry in those pre-peroxide days. And, would you believe... Elvis Costello in dungarees! Tee hee hee... caught them out there. Didn't you just.

I'm just wondering what you lot looked like ten years ago. Of course I don't suppose you think people have the right to change with the times. At least you assume the role of the ultimate judges on what's in. So do us a favour — take those self-satisfied grins off your faces and take a good look in the mirror.

Maybe you don't look so hot. YAWN. Crouch End, N6. Be fair. Yawn, we haven't collected yet. But if we did it wouldn't be spent over the Boots cosmetic counter. — M.S.

IT WAS WITH some surprise, that while leafing through the pages of your weekly periodical, my attention was drawn to a photo of my old band Flip City. By the way, I'm the one in the middle, wearing black.

I must say that I was somewhat dismayed at your rather derogatory notes at the foot of the picture. At the time I think you'll find that Flip City was generally thought of as quite an interesting band, playing mainly the fine songs from the illustrious pen of Mr. Costello.

Perhaps you didn't take the trouble to give us a listen, at one of the numerous gigs we played, both on the London Pub Circuit and at many colleges around the Home Counties.

When you say that no-one, with the exception of Elvis, is doing anything of interest, that is not exactly true. After several abortive attempts and a handful of gigs, there is yet another ex-Flip City member on the way to fame and fortune.

Perhaps you would like to witness this at the unveiling of the incredibly exciting Jericho at Dingwalls on Monday the 8th of May.

While not being in the Elvis mould, the power and dynamics are all there.

Come along and be surprised to find that other ex-Flippers can do something without our good friend Elvis Costello.

MALCOLM DENNIS, North Cheam, Surrey. Right. Would you settle for a copy of "My Aim Is True"? — M.S.

I THINK someone should put Abba and Elvis Costello on the same bill so the hoardings could read "Abba and Costello". P. A. Hammersmith, W6.

I DON'T REALLY believe the depths to which you've sunk; I've always thought NME was a good paper with no apparent competition, and on occasions stunning with the odd superb article; so why on earth the margins of several pages of last week's paper sniping at the T.R.B.? So unlike you, slipped innocently where it wouldn't be too salient.

If you must make pointed nasty and biased remarks why not an article rather than the lavatory graffiti-like positioning of your remarks.

I'm not gay and I don't like the T.R.B. overmuch, but this reeks of music biz involvement, like maybe a friend of Ray Davies amongst the Thrillers, so at least give me some kind of explanation for this strange betrayal of my faith in you. C. LEWIS, London.

Well, I thought it was funny. — RAY DAVIES

I GET THE impression someone at Thrills doesn't like me.

MR. NICE GUY, Marlow. P.S. It was a bit sneaky, wasn't it? The Shit Kicker will reveal all on page 7. — M.S.

NOW THAT Mr. Lowry has revealed all, with regards to Bomber Harris, isn't it about time someone got it together enough to actually plug him in?

MRS. R. HARRIS, London. Don't push your luck. — M.S.

AT THE BOYS' gig I went to last week. I noticed a serious lack of flying cans and glasses. Is it no longer the in thing to launch these containers at the band? If it is, does this mean I have to boo if I don't like them?

JACK SPRAT. Perhaps. Next! — M.S.

ALL I CAN say is that I Down last week is bloody typical of you stock-up posers down in that smoggy sticking metropolis who set daft clues concerning idiotic unwatchable-outside-Thames TV area programmes like who the bleeding hell presents the London Weekend Show when I don't know, can't find out, and can't complete your sodding crossword. Stuff it up your arse!

MORONICALLY DISGUSTED, Nr. Oxford.

You're joking, with all those jagged edges? Anyway, why should you have heard of Dickie Davies? — M.S.

LET'S GET this upfront. Most people are assholes most of the time, and fools. You are no exception, and why should I be? But no matter how good people are at Shitting On Life itself, life itself has a lot to offer someone who can clean his/her personality up a bit.

I liked Angus's review of Steve Hillage's new album: "... twentieth century man has got to do a lot of 'unlearning' before he can learn more..." If you're not sure what this means, but think it might allude to something important, you could do a lot worse than to treat yourself to the paperback book, Journey To Ixtlan:

The Lessons of Don Juan by Carlos Castaneda. It bloody well ought to be worth a couple of pints (foregone) to ANYBODY. It's a real penguin. eh Mac?

JUST ANOTHER (GREEN) WALRUS.

"Love ya!" says Angus. And he mumbled something about 'keep talking the celery' — M.S.

NO OTHER bugger seems to have noticed/cared that Ian MacDonald is now no longer even a 'contributor' to NME. I'd just like to say 'thanks' for a lot of good stuff and assistant editing during the rag's renaissance in the early '70s, and what I saw as the peak around '73. End of some sort of era I suppose, first the Tylers, MacDonald, and now Logan (and I reckon Farren) about to disappear. Only Kent and Murray left.

Whatever you're doing MacDonald, all the best. CHRIS BROOK, Bradford, W. Yorks.

I'm sorry, I just (sniff) can't go on (sob). Pass the Izal on your way out Nick. — M.S.

I'VE GOT the 1973 NME Annual "Hot Rock Guide" and from a Nick Logan article on Rod Stewart: "To paraphrase his own song, Stewart is living proof that provided you wear it well, you can be as old fashioned as you like and still get by." Meanwhile CSM played prophet with D. Bowie Esq.: "Thanks Zig. See you behind the next mask."

LORD LUCAN, Belfast, N. Ireland. Come on, Lucky, that's not such a huge skeleton. — M.S.

HOW APT: in the same issue in which B.O.B. Dylan numbers the "establishment intelligentsia", Tony Parsons snidely repeats the old lie about Nietzsche's Nazi links.

Fact: all his life F.N. despised anti-semites (refusing to even meet his sister's anti-semitic old man). He also poured scorn on nationalism and the Prussian/German "spirit".

While he did express an undue admiration for physical perfection, this probably stemmed from his dissatisfaction at his own near-blindness and weakness, due in no small part to the syphilis which sent him insane and finally killed him. (How's that for Rock 'n' Roll credibility? Too good to rock!) Still, he does not represent a "repressed sicko mentality", since he maintained that physical health depends entirely on an end to sexual and intellectual repressions.

In future, Tony, stick to quoting Wilhelm Reich to establish your intellectual superiority over the rest of us mere mortals — at least you appear to have read him. (And his sex-economics owe a helluva lot to Nietzsche!) Cheers.

THE BLONDIE BEAST. Heme Bay, Kent.

GUESS WHO I think is the most eminently qualified personality for "The Shithead '78" trophy, to be presented by Sir Eric 'sick' Morley, of Mecca productions blah... blah, in early July of this year. Yes, you guessed it — that most fickle, fad-following of hyper-critics; Tony 'sod the women and children, I want off this sinking ship fast' Parsons. MAJOR CARPET-TURD, Debden. I like a bit of constructive criticism. do you Tone? Oj oj, 'old on a mo'...

DOES MONTY Smiff have a severe case of piles on the gob or something? "Rock & Roll is never having to say you're sorry." What often rubbish. Rock and Roll is a fat-cat plot to keep the minds of youth from the real problems of the world, namely that the world is flat and people keep falling off. FRAZER X.

QUOTE from CSM, NME November 1975 (those were the days): "Sadly, Blondie will never be a star simply because she ain't good enough."

Who was Number 1 last week? HARRY CRABBE, Leicester. Since when did a Number 1 qualify as any sign of quality? — M.S.

WITH REGARD to last week's Bag picture, which end was Bob Geldof's arse?

A NICE ONE, Manchester. Give up. — M.S.

AGAINST STIFF competition, your newspaper has been chosen to carry the very first public mention of THE RESISTANCE. Remember, today's cheap publicity is tomorrow's collector's item.

Tired but happy. THE RESISTANCE (sneaky second mention), Liverpool 23.

PLEASE, PLEASE — Teazers, on its knees, implores: DON'T BREAK UP DA BRUDDERS. We wept, we mourned, and the office cat threw up when we heard the sad news from our current man in New York, Paul Rambali: one of the Ramones is quitting the band.

Actually, the story ends there, rather prematurely, since we're sworn to secrecy as to which particular brudder it is (though, to ease your grief a little, we can tell you that it isn't Joey); all will be revealed, explained and elucidated in the imminent future, when our scribe returns with the exclusive interview/revelations.

The Buddy Holly biopic based on John Goldstone's excellent biography, Buddy Holly — His Life And Music, has now been completed, and will be premiered in Holly's home town of Lubbock, Texas, on May 20th. Called The Buddy Holly Story, the movie was sanctioned by Maria Elena, Holly's widow, and stars Gary Busey in the title-role. UK distribution is still being arranged.

Meanwhile over in Luxembourg at the appropriately named Blow-Up club, minute DJ Tony Prince was just introducing the evening's star attraction — The Pirates, as it happens — when a rather fearsome proportion of the local constabulary, armed with machine-guns and accompanied by none-too-friendly assistants, entered and surrounded the premises and proceeded to give everyone spot searches. Nothing was found, no-one was arrested. The gig went ahead. Presumably they were just annoyed because Luxembourg hadn't won the Eurovision Song Contest.

Talking of which, we scoured the office in vain for someone who'd actually seen it, so we're hardly familiar with what happened, though we did note that the UK's entry, Co-Co's "Bad Old Days" came eleventh — i.e. the worst-ever showing by a UK record during the 20 years of the competition. The band's chances of becoming tax exiles in the next six months were thus gravely diminished.

We also note that Norway's entry, sung by Jan Teigen, failed to get any votes whatsoever, which is arguably a mark of some distinction. Teigen himself certainly regards it so. "This was my greatest success," he said afterwards. We anticipate his failures with mild interest.

Rat-watcher here at T-zers had to admire the latest display of 25-hours-a-day lugging by the irrepressible Bob Geldof. He was seen last week hanging out with the Ipswich Town football team whilst they recorded their Wembley anthem, "Ipswich, Ipswich, Get That Goal" (yeah, yeah, yeah) right in the heart of their FA Cup rivals' territory — Wessex Studios, in Arsenal's domain of downtown Highbury. Ipswich's producer, incidentally, is Muti Lange, who is hoping to score a chart hat-trick, with G. Parker and Ipswich T. to add to B. Rats. Also present at the session: Crawlers' Tony Braunagel (who wrote the ditty with Lange) and Terry Wilson Slessor.

Meanwhile, T-zers has no particular sympathies about the forthcoming Cup Final, though

THE UNCOUTH rabble (top) are the formerly respectable gentlemen who play for Fulham F.C., and were seduced by the prospect of following Nottingham Forest into the chasms (pic: DENIS O'REGAN); (above) JOHNNY ROTTEN and JOAN JETT in New York. (Joan asked photographer JENNY LENS to send it to us; gone is the weedy, mustachioed JONATHAN RICHMAN — here (right) is the new Schwarzenegger-styled model, unveiled at Aylesbury on Saturday. (Pic: PAUL SLATTERY); (below) a recumbent PETER GREEN, who very rarely points his frame in the direction of a camera these days. (Pic: ADRIAN BOOT).

DUE TO PRODUCTION difficulties caused by the May 1st Bank Holiday, next week's NME will be published a day later than normal — available nationally on Friday instead of Thursday.

everyone hopes that Arsenal lose.

More football T-zers: those nice young lads down at t'Cottage (Fulham F.C.) have just produced the first football punk record. That's surprising in itself, but it's absurd when you consider that the record in question is Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Are Made For Walking". A punk version of that? Anyway, the lads were reeled pleased with it, dressed up as you see them for photographer Denis O'Regan, and then proceeded to lose their last home game of the season to lowly Millwall.

According to one recent Paul McCartney interview, Macca said that the "Mull Of Kintyre" B-side, "Girly School" was actually a ditty composed entirely of porn movie titles. In which case, no doubt he'll be interested to hear about the latest software movie to open in New York. It's called "Please Please Me".

Martin ("If the NE wins the general election, they are entitled to my respect") Walker, writing in Tuesday's Guardian about this weekend's anti-Nazi carnival in Hackney (see page 12) rather nullified his doubtless worthy aims by getting the date of the event wrong.

Talking of Nazis, erstwhile fans of Bryan Ferry and Roxy Music (we assume there are no remaining ones) might have noted that Ol' Ferrari was quoted in the Sunday Times as saying — nostalgically, yet — that "The Nazis had a great sense of visuals".

Correct us if we're wrong (and you will, you will), but the Bee Gees' feat in topping all four NME charts this week is the first occasion that this has been accomplished since Rod Stewart did it in 1971 with "Maggie May" and its accompanying album, "Every Picture Tells A Story".

Tom Robinson told us he was delighted and surprised with his band's debut album, set for release next month. Meantime, the band's keyboard vacancy (following the departure of Mark Ambler) has been temporarily, though ably, filled by Nick Plytas, formerly of Roogalator.

And a very encouraging debut gig for The Quarks at the Kings Head, Islington, on Monday night.

That's it for now. If any of you punters out there catch sight of Blast Furnace, just tell him from us that we'd like to see his X-Ray Spex cover story, his Ro Diddle review, his
