EARTH WIND & FIRE, CHEAP TRICK: TOURS

TOP U.S. soul outfit Earth Wind & Fire are now confirmed for three major British concerts in the late winter — at Birmingham Bingley Hall (March 2) and London Wembley Arena (3 and 4). They'll be presenting their full spectacular American stage show, which includes a "magical extravaganza" created by Doug Henning. The band are playing the entire show themselves with no support act, and the promoters are Alec Leslie Entertainments.

Tickets for the Birmingham show are all at the one price of £4, and they go on sale on January 13 at recognised agencies in Birmingham, Stoke and Manchester. Postal applications for the London gigs may be made from next Monday to Wembley Arena Box-Office, Reference Earth Wind & Fire, Wembley, Middlesex, making cheques and POs payable to "Wembley Stadium Ltd." and enclosing s.a.e. — tickets cost £4.50, £3.75 and £3, and the box-office opens to personal applicants on January 15.

They can also be seen in the massive UNICEF TV special "A Gift Of Song", now set for screening in this country on the full ITV network on Saturday, January 13. As reported a month ago, the show — filmed in Washington — also features Elton John, Rod Stewart, The Bee Gees, Abba, Kristofferson & Coolidge, John Denver and Olivia Newton-John, among others.

AMERICAN band Cheap Trick return to Britain later this month for their longest-ever tour here, playing 22 major dates in a month-long period and culminating at London's Hammersmith Odeon.

and by Frank Zappa, Kinks

The itinerary, which concentrates heavily on the college circuit, ties in with the February 9 release by CBS of their new album "Dream Police". It will be preceded on February 2 by a single extracted from the LP, though titles have not yet been selected. The band are also to be showcased in BBC-2's "Rock Goes to College" series, but the transmission date is not yet set.

Tour dates are Oxford Polytechnic (January 26), Plymouth Polytechnic (27), Leicester University (30), Brighton Sussex University (February 1), Bristol University (2), Manchester University (3), Canterbury Odeon (6), Keele University (7), Nottingham University (9), Bradford University (10), Birkenhead Hamilton Club (11), Cambridge University (12), Colchester Institute (13), Scarborough Penthouse (16), Glasgow Strathclyde University (17), Fife St. Andrew's University (18), Edinburgh Tiffany's (19), Sheffield Polytechnic (21), Leeds Polytechnic (22), Newcastle Mayfair

(23), St. Albans City Hall (24) and London Hammersmith Odeon (25).

FRANK ZAPPA, whose British tour plans were revealed in our last issue, has been lined up for eight dates next month — at Birmingham Odeon (February 11), Manchester Apollo (12), Newcastle City Hall (13), Glasgow Apollo (14), Brighton Centre (16) and London Hammersmith Odeon (17, 18 and 19).

It's understood there will be two performances on the final night. Owing to the protracted holiday period, Zappa's itinerary has not yet been announced officially — but his gigs are already being advertised by the venues concerned, so they would appear to have been finalised. THE KINKS are going on the road at the end of this month. Here again, their schedule won't be announced until next week, but it's known that their dates include Birmingham Odeon on January 27.

BILL NELSON: A NEW NOISE

BILL NELSON, former leader of the now-defunct Be-Bop Deluxe, is now poised to launch his new band Red Noise — first with a single later this month, then their debut album, leading up to a major concert tour in March.

The single, pressed in red vinyl and issued by Harvest on January 25, is titled "Furniture Music". The B-side features two tracks, "Acquitted By Mirrors" and "Wonder Toys That Last For Ever". The LP follows on February 9 and is called "Sound On Sound", consisting of 12 tracks penned by Nelson himself.

The U.K. tour by Bill Nelson's Red Noise (that's their official billing) takes in Bristol Hippodrome (March 4), Southampton Gaumont (6), Birmingham Odeon (7), Leicester De Montfort Hall (8), Lancaster University (9), Liverpool Empire (10), Manchester Apollo (11), Newcastle City Hall (12), Sheffield City Hall (13), Bradford St George's Hall (14), Leeds University (17) and London Drury Lane Theatre Royal (18).

Tickets for the London gig are priced £3.50, £3, £2.50 and £2, and they should be available next week. For booking details elsewhere, please contact the respective box-offices. After completing their British commitments, Red Noise leave for tours of Europe and the United States.

RICK NELSON FOR SADLERS WELLS!

LONDON'S Sadlers Wells Theatre is to break new ground by staging a series of occasional Country-and-Western concerts. And the first show on Sunday, January 28, features Rick Nelson along with Roy Clark and Buck Trent. The second concert is scheduled for an unspecified date in March, with Willie Nelson headlining.

Sadlers Wells is, along with the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden, one of London's two leading centres for ballet and opera. In the past it has staged a few MOTR Sunday concerts, the most recent being by Maddy Prior, but this is the first time it has planned a non-classical series.

The opening show also marks the return to Britain of Rick Nelson — formerly Ricky Nelson, rock star and erstwhile Presley rival. It's understood that The Oakridge Boys were originally booked for this date, but were subsequently forced to pull out — which was when Nelson stepped in.

NEWS

Elvis does a Palais glide!

ELVIS COSTELLO & The Attractions have slotted in another London show as the final date in their current extensive U.K. tour. It's at the Hammersmith Palais on Tuesday, January 30 (8pm), and tickets are on sale all at the one price of £2.50. As on the rest of the tour, support acts are Richard Hell & The Voidoids and John Cooper Clarke.

Immediately before Christmas, Costello and the band played a seven-night season at London's Dominion Theatre.

which proved to be a complete sell-out — and that's why they decided to add another date in the capital. Additionally, Costello apparently wants to play a London gig at which the audience can dance, rather than all remaining seated.

This will be his final appearance in Britain for some time as, immediately after the Palais show, he and The Attractions leave for America where they are expected to stay for at least three months. Meanwhile, the new Costello album "Armed Forces" is released (complete with free EP) this weekend.

DAMNED, ROCKPILE IN BUST FUND CONCERT

THE DAMNED, Dave Edmunds' Rockpile, Tyla Gang and some members of Dr. Feelgood are among those taking part in a special benefit show at London Camden Electric Ballroom this Saturday (6). It's expected that several other well-known acts will be appearing, though their names can't be announced in advance for contractual reasons. Admission is £2.75. The gig is to raise funds for French promoter Marc Zermati who has been busted on a drugs charge (though he claims it was a plant).

Gloria Mundi: sic transit

GLORIA MUNDI return to the London gig scene this weekend, after a lengthy absence, to play Camden Music Machine (tonight, Thursday) and the Marquee Club (Friday) — supported at both venues by Leeds band The Jerks. They then go into the studios to start work on their next album, with John Punter producing which they hope to complete by the end of February. They plan a series of one-off gigs in March and April, to be followed by a major U.K. tour in May, coinciding with the LP's release. Meanwhile they are continuing to work with temporary guitarist Kirby as, despite auditioning a number of applicants, they still haven't been able to find a permanent new member. Any offers?

BRIAN JAMES GOES IT ALONE

BRIAN JAMES, former guitarist and songwriter with The Damned and Tanz Der Youth, intends to operate strictly as a soloist in future. He plans to record and perform extensively throughout this year, using various guest musicians and friends for what he describes as "the next phase of my career". His gig last weekend at London's Electric Ballroom, backed by an all-star pick-up band, launched this new departure and is an indication of his future approach.

THE CLASH set out at the end of this month on a three-week concert series in the United States which, with their usual diplomacy, they call their "Pearl Harbour '79 Tour"! They'll be playing dates in Vancouver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Cleveland, Boston, Washington, Minneapolis and New York.

PROCOL SPLIT IS CONFIRMED

Brooker's solo path

GARY BROOKER, founder member of Procol Harum, is to record his first-ever solo album. And the significance of this announcement is that it confirms long-running rumours suggesting that Harum have broken up. The split has been persistently denied for at least six months, but now an official statement from Chrysalis Records admits that the band no longer exist after a career spanning ten albums.

The Brooker album features songs written by himself in conjunction with ex-Harum colleague Keith Reid, plus ex-King Crimson stalwart Pete Sinfield. Producer is George Martin, and it's being recorded at Strawberry Studios South and Air London, for April release by Chrysalis. Musicians on the set include former Sutherland Brothers & Quiver guitarist Tim Renwick, bassist Bruce Lynch and drummer Dave Mattacks. As yet, there are no plans for Brooker to perform as a soloist, but this is seen as a likely development.

CHIC ARE GO

CHIC — the Atlantic Records group who were 12th best-selling singles artists in Britain last year (see Points Table on facing page) with such hits as "Dance, Dance, Dance" and "Le Freak" — fly into this country to headline a one-off concert at London Hammersmith Odeon on Saturday, January 20. Tickets priced £3, £2.50 and £2 are available now, and the show is promoted by Barry Dickins and Rod McSween of ITB. There are at present no plans for Chic to play any provincial gigs on this visit, although it's understood that a second Hammersmith date may be added.

Teenage spots.

This new two-minute-a-day treatment has everything you need to clear them fast.

Clinical tests show it works.

Spots, pimples, blackheads . . . aren't they a nuisance! But now, you needn't live with them for long, because now Clean and Clear is here.

Clean and Clear was specially developed by Beecham dermatologists after studying young people's skin problems just like yours. Clinical trial has shown how well it works. And it takes only two minutes a day to use.

Everything you need

Clean and Clear is different in two important ways. First, it's a medicated gel wash, not an ointment, cream or lotion. Secondly, it combines, in one preparation, everything you need to clear spots fast.

Clean and Clear cleanses thoroughly but gently - carries away excess surface oil and germs, and dries up spots. It frees blocked pores, to dissolve unsightly blackheads and it checks the cause of inflammation. What's more, it has an antibacterial agent expressly selected for its ability to penetrate and combat bacteria deeper down.

How to use Clean and Clear. Make a lather with water. Massage in for 1 minute twice daily. Rinse and pat dry.

Clinically tested

In order to demonstrate how successfully Clean and Clear works, a strictly controlled trial was undertaken in the dermatology clinic of a leading London teaching hospital.

DEVELOPED BY BEECHAM

Clinically tested for clearing spots

Available only at your chemist. Starting today, Clean and Clear your skin.

All those taking part were young people and, in a high percentage of cases, the doctor in charge reported really positive improvement.

Clear healthy skin

Massaged in for just one minute twice daily, this Medicated Wash could make a wonderful difference for you too . . . effectively treat unsightly spots and pimples, help your skin look clearer and healthier than for years.

Get Clean and Clear at your chemists today. It's easy to use, non-greasy, and no unpleasant odour or telltale trace remains on your skin. Most important of all, it has everything you need to clear spots fast - and clinical tests show it works.

Price on the road

ALAN PRICE sets out in just over two weeks' time on his first full U.K. tour for more than a year. Confirmed dates are Norwich Theatre Royal (January 21), Cardiff New Theatre (26), Slough Fulcrum Theatre (28), Glasgow Strathclyde University (February 3), Eastbourne Congress (9), Hatfield Forum (10), Manchester Royal Exchange Theatre (11), Bradford St. George's Hall (14), Sunderland Empire (15), Bridlington Spa Theatre (17), Sheffield Crucible (18), St. Helens Theatre Royal (21), Croydon Fairfield Hall (23) and Southend Cliffs Pavilion (25).

Tickets are on sale now at all box-offices and usual agencies, with prices ranged from £1.50 to £3, and the support act will be announced later. To coincide with the tour, Jet are to release a new Price single titled "Baby Of Mine", a self-penned track taken from his current album "England My England" - and it will be a 12-inch red-vinyl heart-shaped record! Price has also recorded the theme and incidental music for a new ATV comedy series called "Turtles Progress", starting in March.

CRAZY CAVAN BUSY ROCKIN'

CRAZY CAVAN 'n' The Rhythm Rockers have a heavy gig schedule in January, with confirmed dates so far at London Southgate Royalty (tonight, Thursday), Barking-side Old Maypole (Saturday), London Tottenham The Fox (8), Oxford RAF (9), Canterbury College of Art (11), London New Cross Lawrie Grove Hall (12), London Kensington Nashville (13), Rayleigh Crocs Club (15), Stockport Warren Buckley Jazz Cellar (18), Fife St. Andrew's University (19), Manchester Mayflower (20), Manchester City Festival (21), Biggleswade Shuttleworth College (26) and Weymouth Pavilion (27).

STRAIGHT 8's BLITZ ON '79

STRAIGHT 8 - one of the bands widely tipped for success in 1979 due, to no small extent, to Pete Townshend's involvement with them - play a string of London dates this month, prior to visiting America for a string of special gigs in Los Angeles. They appear at Fulham Greyhound (tomorrow, Friday), Fulham Golden Lion (January 10 and 31), Harrow Rd. Windsor Castle (13), Marquee Club (16), Camden Dingwalls (19) and Hammersmith Swan (20). They are also at High Wycombe Nags Head tonight (Thursday). The band, who have just completed their debut album "No Noise From Here" with Townshend as executive producer, also play a five-day stint at Paris Gibus Club from January 23.

999 have added gigs at Leeds Fan Club (tonight, Thursday) and Northampton County Ground (this Saturday), besides their show at Manchester Russell Club tomorrow (Friday) reported in our last issue.

Hope & Anchor: another festival

THE HOPE & ANCHOR in Islington, one of London's leading pub rock venues, is staging another event similar to its highly-acclaimed Front Row Festival last year - which subsequently became a live album.

This latest event is billed as Last Year's Festival, and once again it mainly features acts which have a long-standing connection with the pub. It precedes a three-week closure at the venue in February, to enable a new bar to be installed.

More acts are still being finalised, but those confirmed so far are the Joe Jackson Band (tonight, Thursday), Blast Furnace (Friday), Tribesman (Saturday), The Leyton Buzzards (Sunday), The Mekons (January 8), The Dogs (9), The Soft Boys (12), Rico (13), After The Fire (14), Sassafras (17), China Street (18), Lew Lewis Band (19), The Troggs (21), Eric Bell Band (25), Sore Throat (26 and 27) and The Radiators (28).

Pressure Shocks headline a benefit for Release at London Camden Dingwalls on Sunday, January 14, supported by Mindless Pleasures. The gig launches Release's new book "Trouble With The Law - The Release Bust Book", published on January 25.

OFF THE RECORD

The Three Degrees follow up their recent "Giving Up, Giving In" hit with a single titled "Woman In Love", released by Ariola this weekend. The girls are due back in Britain early this year, with their date schedule to be announced shortly.

Heavy Cochran's debut single "I've Got Big Balls", released on the Psycho label through Spartan Records, is now available again after selling out its first pressing in four days - despite being banned by several leading chain stores because of its title. Cochran is making a series of personal appearances in the London area this month, but won't be performing as it was impossible to obtain work permits during the holiday period. But he'll be coming over from America with his band in the early spring, to coincide with the release of his debut album.

U.S. country singer Janie Fricke makes her debut on CBS this weekend with the single "Believe In You". It's followed on January 19 by her album "Singer Of Songs".

Issued through Charly Records and January 12 is a Jerry Lee Lewis album titled "Duets". It features 11 vocal duet tracks by Lewis and assorted friends, and it's appearing on the Sun label.

Among Polydor singles out this weekend are "Sir Dancealot" by Olympic Runners, "Heat Of The Beat" by Roy Ayers & Wayne Henderson and "Symphony Of Love" by Miquel Brown. All are available in both seven and 12-inch form.

Leading U.S. disco artist Bob McGilpin has a single called "Superstar" issued by Ember this month - the 12-inch version comes out this weekend and the seven-inch a fortnight later. His album of the same name follows on February 9.

These five divine people comprise ANGLETRAX, a band who've already built up a considerable following and reputation on the gig circuit. Now they seem poised to broaden their horizons, because they've just signed a worldwide recording deal with Hansa and expect to have their first single released within the next few weeks. Pictured in their dressing room-toilet-cupboard at the Rock Garden, Angletrex are (left to right) Martin Heath, Dan Who, Rene Renno, Jerry Minge and Wendy Herman.

JON HISEMAN of Colosseum II
ROBERT GORDON

I WOKE up one morning and didn't feel any better for it. So I took a bus to Chelsea to meet Richard Hell, who woke up that same morning and felt positively the worse for it.

Hell and The Voidoids were staying in a house-boat moored off fashionable Cheyne Walk, and during the night the electricity had failed, leaving them to face the damp, cold British winter unprotected.

Thus when I arrived at the offices of Riviera Global — who recently took charge of the Voidoids' affairs — kingpin Jake Riviera (nee Jakeman) was employing his most business-like manner to rehouse them at the expense, naturally, of the defaulted house-boat owner.

Hell (nee Myers) arrived a few minutes later, resplendent in motorcycle boots and bright yellow mohair overcoat, and accompanied by Elvis Costello (nee MacManus). Nick Lowe, who'll produce The Voidoids' second album as soon as they finish their tour with Elvis, wasn't around. But then, as far as I can recall, Lowe is his real name anyway.

That the Pub-Rock Mafia should be handling career admin for the Big Apple's most hapless musical celebrity is not as unlikely as it first seems. Back in '76, when Riviera was still a part of Stiff Records, Stiff released The Voidoids' debut, "Another World" coupled with "Blank Generation" and "You Gotta Lose", in a not so limited as was claimed edition of at least 5000 copies.

But Nick Lowe producing? Now this is definitely incongruous. I wouldn't have pegged Richard Hell as the type of guy who loved the sound of stolen licks.

Hell's reasoning however, was simple: he liked the sound of Elvis's records.

"But we ain't signed to Radar (Costello's label)," he tells me. "We just put a lot of effort into getting ourselves off our Sire contract. And we wanted this tour to serve some purpose so we found a happy arrangement with Radar bringing out a single while we were here.

"I don't know where we're going to be permanently but that's Jake's department. He's going to get me a contract. . . After that I'm going to play it by ear.

"Sire was a miserable company." He almost spits out the sentence. "We didn't get a royalty statement for the entire time we were there!"

A Sire spokesman pointed out that it was very possible they never earned any royalties.

Whatever, let's not sling mud. "That's an original idea," responds Richard.

How then, ask on a different tack, did Richard Hell come to be touring with Elvis Costello (apart from the fact that his line in sardonic verbal parrying must go down a storm at Global House. . .)?

"I met up with Jake and we talked about the future. We thought it would be helpful to all concerned to rehearse for our new record, and to expose ourselves once more to the horrified public."

RICHARD HELL and The Voidoids first toured these lands in the latter half of '77 with The Clash, whose fiercely partisan public were not so much horrified as indifferent and occasionally hostile.

This aspect of life doesn't seem to upset Hell in the slightest — which is all well and good because on the one Costello tour gig I saw he provoked a similar, if not nearly so clamorous, response.

That Clash tour may have been a kind of pyrrhic victory for Hell's audience confrontation tactics (and like him or loathe him, he is a compulsive performer), but at least the one solo gig they played at London's Music Machine was a definite triumph. Even Johnny Rotten saw fit to come on stage and raise his can of lager in tribute.

That was over a year ago. So whatever happened to Richard Hell in 1978?

"Well. . . I made a movie," he offers, "which was pleasant in a number of ways and, uuugh, revoltin' in an equinumber of ways."

It's virtually impossible to convey his inimitable guttural drawl on the printed page. His Kentucky-born accent, thanks to a long history of ah, sinus troubles, tends to roll slowly off bulging lips like the speech of a punch-drunk boxer.

The movie was made by German new wave (sic) director Ulli Lamm,

By PAUL RAMBALI

Pix: PENNIE SMITH

Who says it's good to be alive?

whose most famous film is Tenderness Of The Wolves, based on the true story of a homosexual child predator in Germany who would finish his assaults with a quick bite of his victim's jugular.

"He had a picture of American life and we were his New York heroes," explains Hell. "He thought he'd pin us all down like insects. He had all these things that he'd picked up as being characteristic of us. In every superficial way it was our actual way of life, but the meat of it, the way that we'd react to the other people in the movie, had nothing in common with the way we would have spontaneously reacted. So it was real embarrassing.

"I just hope it doesn't get released. Now that I've been paid."

Having seen some of Lamm's films, Hell originally had high hopes for this one.

"But the main thing is I just didn't have any other place to turn. I just had to start from scratch wherever I looked. It was right after we got back from England. I was really disillusioned because. . .

"I'm just not a real fun lovin' guy," he declares.

"It's a whole lot of fun bein' on tour but me, I just don't like fun. I like to get fed intravenously. I'm a lazy, lazy type of guy.

"And it was like being weaned from having everything layed in your lap to having to earn your keep. . . Having to start from scratch at every city you get to. . .

"I like to be pampered. It's not that I ever have been, but that's what makes me want to be."

Why come back to it then?

Thirty-odd dates in almost as many weeks doesn't sound like being fed intravenously to me.

"Because there's no alternative. Any kinda line o' work that I'm gonna be in is gonna be something that sorta depends on public response for its success. So I figured at least I had a head start in this one, and I also had a whole lotta great songs. . . I mean, they wouldn't take me on the Apollo moonshots, so I decided to accept my fate and be venomous from the boards."

But if you're that lazy there must be easier ways to make a living.

"No there ain't. What could I do, man? I could sort mail in the Post Office, that's what I did for a while. . . I just wanna do the least work and get the most return."

Ignore, if you will, the sly smile that's been flickering across his face, and here's one musician who doesn't feel the need to suffer for his art and doesn't mind admitting it either.

It may all stem from a desire to be perverse — no doubt at least part of it does — but Hell's offhand manner is a wild contrast to the eat, sleep, live and die rock'n'roll, school.

"I eat and sleep it in the sense that there's no distinction between how I eat and sleep and the message of the songs and the way we act on stage. But. . . erh. . . I like to eat and sleep real slow, I mean, I think life is for fun and pleasure."

He wouldn't call himself a hedonist though, because hedonism is associated with having a lot of things that give one pleasure.

"And to me, it's a real struggle to find anything that's any fun."

CONTAIN my surprise and scepticism at these desultory revelations, wondering if life in New York has become really that unbearable.

"Oh it's really happy. I like New York," he chirps. "I'm not very accustomed to England at all. I don't know how to read people around here. . . It's mysterious. Passed the question of understanding the accent — once I've translated it into English I then have to figure out what it means!"

I should have known. Two months after getting thrown out of a private Delaware high school for running away with Tom Verlaine (nee Miller) and starting forest fires in Alabama, Hell arrived in New York with a hundred dollars to his name. He's been there ever since.

Malcolm McLaren saw Hell in Television early in '75. McLaren, then dragging The New York Dolls through their final convulsions, was immediately struck by Hell's short, jagged hair and torn T-shirts, and tried to become his manager.

But Hell wouldn't have it, and still retains a certain contempt for the would-be Machiavellian haberdasher, preferring rather that I enquire of the colour of his socks than of his memories of those brief, epoch-moulding days.

There's no doubt, however, that Hell did play a crucial part in shaping the mores of punk, albeit through the distortion of a media that latched — copy-hungry — onto terms like nihilism, narcissism and the Blank Generation, and amidst the interaction of a few other seminal figures.

Most of the latter have now moved to lush pastures sales action wise, while The Voidoids still play once a month in the same old New York clubs.

Hell formed The Voidoids after a nine month spell with The Heartbreakers, recruiting drummer Marc Ramone (nee Bell) from Wayne County's band, and meeting virtuoso jazz-inclined guitarist Robert Quine (who is, incidentally, a qualified lawyer) in the packing department of a book store where the pair found themselves working.

The other guitarist in what is, at the very least, one of the best new guitar bands around, is Ivan Julian, who arrived via a newspaper ad. By all accounts it was a match made in heaven. He walked in, jammed on a couple of songs, and was thenceforth a Voidoid.

Lately, two new members have replaced the departed Marc Bell: "The drummer's name is Johnny, and the bass player, who will be moving over to sax and keyboards once we work out the parts, is called Frankie."

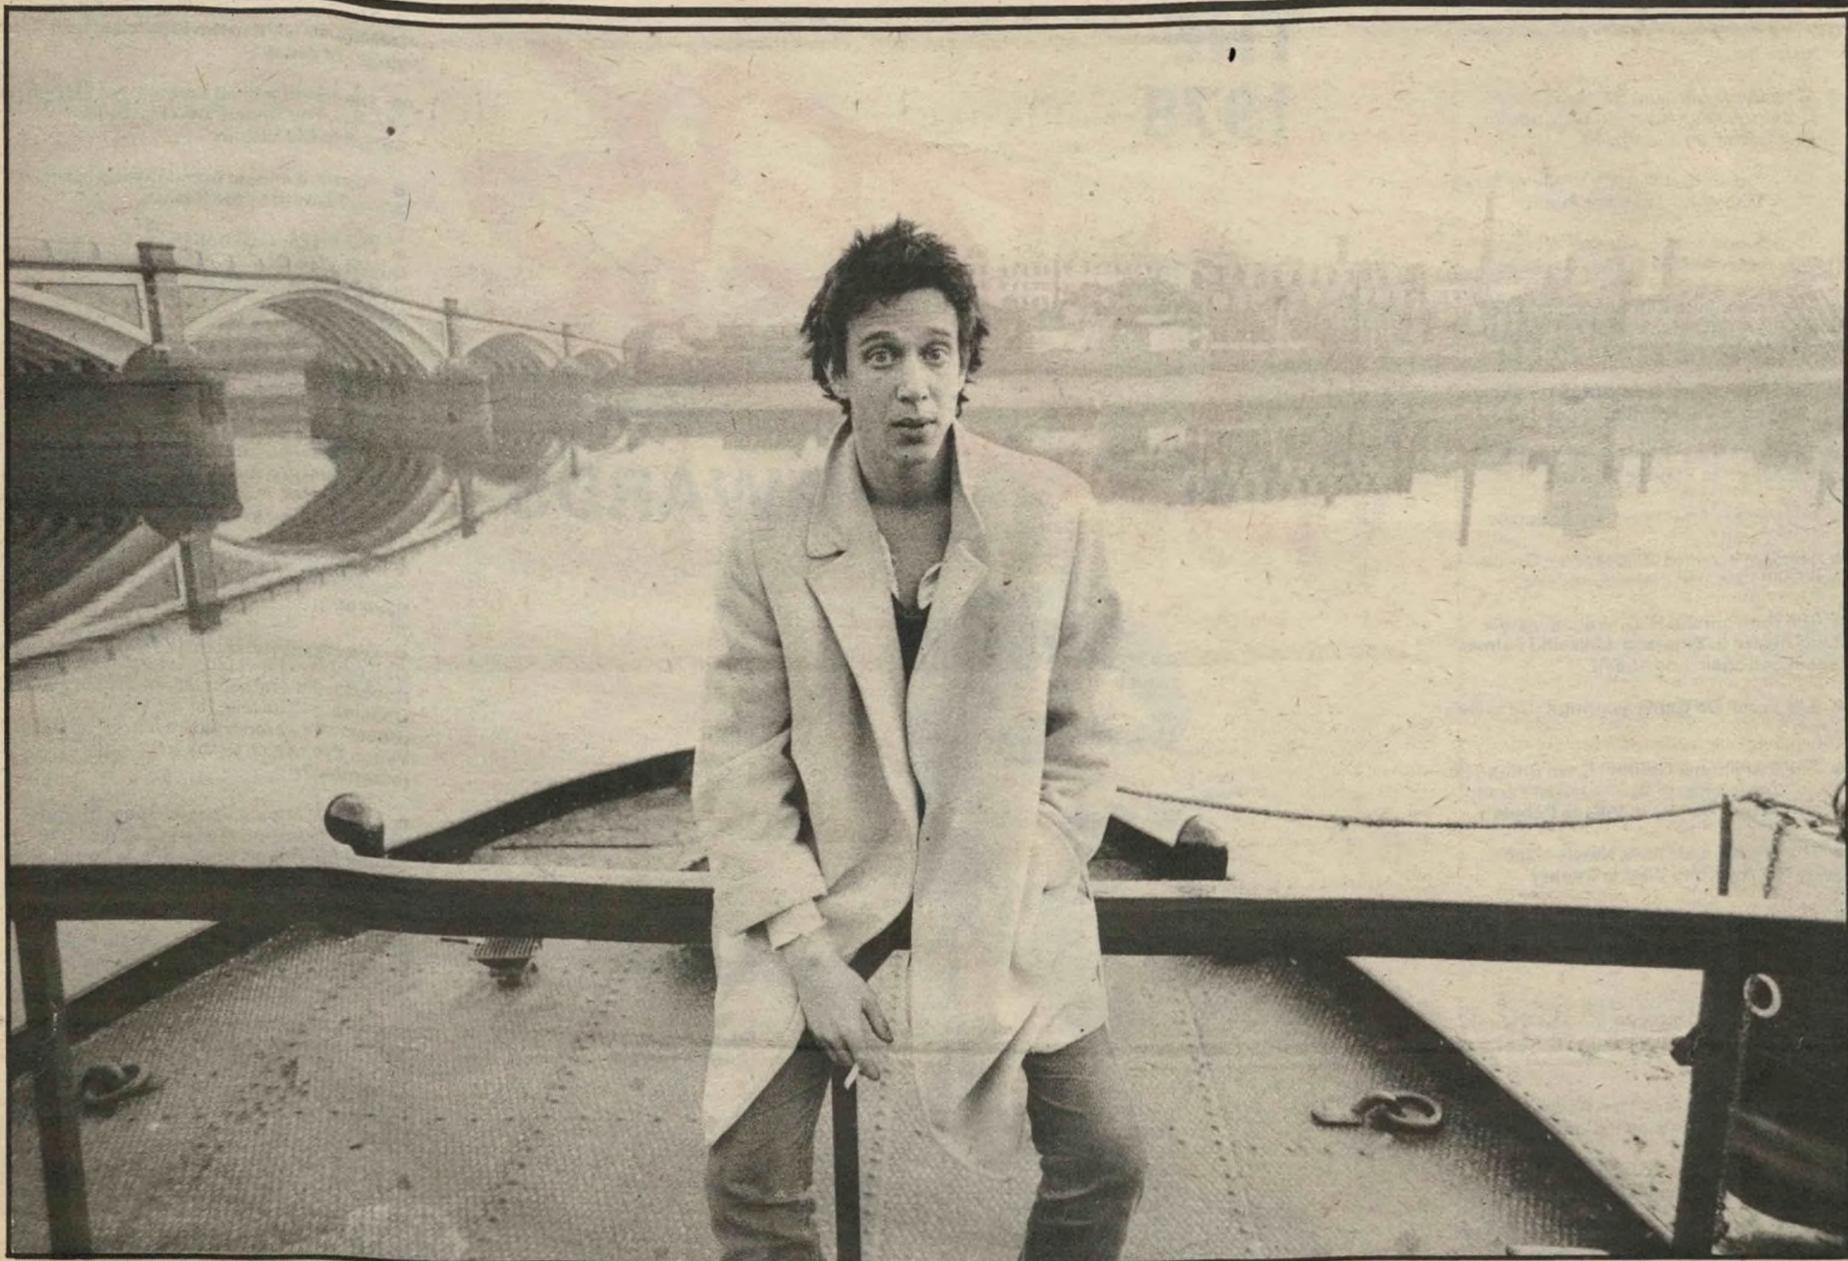

Where are they from?

"New York".

I should have known.

FOR THE PAST few minutes Hell has been fiddling with the inside pocket lining of his jacket. His slack-jawed countenance and loping arms invoke impressions of a

RICHARD HELL: messing about on the river.

To Hell and back (it's located on a houseboat near Cheyne Walk) . . . in which the head Voidoid expounds on life in manner both humorous and depressing.

monkey with an itch to scratch that can't quite be reached.

"I got my whole identification, my soul is in here somewhere . . ." he explains.

And suddenly, responding to a question he'd earlier fended off with brittle sarcasm . . .

"It must be very frightened people who make these poseur accusations."

They probably think you're taking a contrived stance and that if they allow themselves to be affected then they're somehow being taken for a ride.

"Who's kidding who? How am I in a position to benefit from anything I do?"

Reflecting on the events of recent years it's easy to see what he means.

"For instance, the term Blank Generation got widespread use before it was ever associated with me. People would come and see us, and we would be accused of trying to cash in on it. It just seemed like the most bizarre thing, 'cause from the very beginning of my whole career I always figured . . . ahhh . . . ahh . . ."

What did you figure, Richard?

"Who the fuck would wanna act like us? How could anybody accuse us of acting this way to get approval?"

But you got notoriety and attention from it.

"Yeah, but to me it always pointed out how superficial a person that could say something like that was. Because it they'd ever taken a look at us . . ."

And he's right in that respect. But on the subject of the Blank Generation and his idea — that we are all given a blank sheet of paper on which we can invent ourselves — I wonder if there have been any second thoughts.

"Any departure from what we've done before is musical more than anything. The biggest flaw with that first record was that it didn't compel you. A song should be compelling from beginning to end, and I think Nick will be helpful with that. A song ought to drive, it should take you with it, whereas on that record you just get confused by it.

"But I'll tell you what I mean by inventing yourself. It means fulfilling what your ideal picture of yourself is, feeling proud about your own idea of what's good, and making yourself be that despite all the obstacles that have been created.

"It was picturing rock'n'roll as a way of life, which at the time was completely foreign to me, that did it. I was writing but it felt kinda futile. I was writing prose and poetry and publishing a magazine. I had a little printing press in my house. That was all when I was a teenager. I just suddenly realised rock'n'roll was a real free field, I didn't have anything established in that world and there was nothing preventing me from accomplishing whatever was possible.

"We could be unencumbered in that way. There was nothing preventing us from becoming just what we saw a really great rock'n'roll group could be — to replace all the garbage that we saw and carry out our own ideas."

But the financial and even artistic constraints of writing and music are fairly similar. Hell says he started writing because it seemed like the easiest way for him to make a living. In both fields he soon found otherwise. So why still make music?

"Music is the best . . ."

"See for me, every kinda effort is a compromise. I just can't help it. I'd really rather stay in bed all day long."

If I tried that I'd be bored to tears within two days.

"That's definitely true. I know from experience that I can't. But I can't help feeling that everybody feels that way. They all really wanna lie around in the sun all day. To me it always feels like there's some kinda flaw in me that makes me wanna, makes me need to do anything else besides that.

"Cause I just can't figure out why you need to have something to do. I'd rather just stay in bed and grab a handful of oatmeal and put it in my mouth and have some broad give me a blow job and grab the syringe and jab it in.

"But I know it's unacceptable after a few hours. And whichever one I'm doing, I resent not being able to do the other."

AND WITH that, I begin to appreciate that he isn't jiving. Because most people lack either motivation or satisfaction and sometimes both. It doesn't take much courage to admit this but it does take a lot of grit in these God-less times to deal effectively with the feeling that there is no particular reason for going through life except to go from one momentary diversion to the next when it all doesn't matter anyway because we're all ultimately alone and we all arrive at the same end so what's the point, etc. etc.

No wonder Hell's literary hero is the 19th Century writer Joris-Kral Huysmans and his character creation Des Esseintes. (Huysmans, incidentally, was one of the few people of his time to recognise the merits of Verlaine — the writer, not the ashen-faced guitarist).

Des Esseintes was the quintessential decadent, and also hopelessly neurotic and angst-ridden. Yet his angst foreshadowed a 20th Century one found in the literary tradition of Conrad's Heart Of Darkness, Satre's Nausea and Pynchon's V-oid.

But I don't buy Hell's way of looking at it. Because the final link in that chain of thought is: "Why don't I just go and jump out of the nearest available window?" And if you don't then you're back at square one.

But I do like Richard Hell, despite himself. And I think Richard Hell, likes himself, despite himself.

Darkness at the edge of your mind. . .

. . . and other remembrances of psychedelic times past and future. ROKY ERICKSON, the Martian Van Morrison, will be visiting your town in 'person' next month with his Aliens in tow. ROY CARR fastens his seatbelt for the journey. Don't open that door!

THOUGH ALL but a stubbornly devoted few have long since given up hope of Syd Barrett ever picking up the threads of his erratic career, hope continues to spring eternal that rock's other celebrated acid casualty Roky Erickson will eventually profit from the motherlode he struck back in Texas in the mid-'60s with The Thirteenth Floor Elevators.

Briefly, for those unfamiliar with both Erickson and The Elevators: their main claim to fame was that they were arguably the first rock band to advertise themselves as "psychedelic" and in doing so pre-dated the Haight-Ashbury Summer Of Love beads, bells and brain-damage boom.

During the period 1966-1969, the Elevators released four albums and seven singles through Kenny Rogers' brother Lelan's Austin-based International Artists combine — a local label which is probably the only company ever to have spawned its very own fan club.

In those days, the Elevators allegedly dropped acid and sucked dope in the same ferocious quantities as rednecked Texans drain cases of Coors. Indeed, local folklore has it that the name Thirteenth Floor Elevators was derived from the 13th letter in the alphabet (M as in marijuana), and that Elevator was a synonym for getting high. Erickson claimed that as most buildings don't acknowledge a 13th floor, then "if you wanna get to the 13th floor, ride our elevator!"

Such wisdom!

The Elevators' fondness for natural and chemical stimulants resulted not only in outpouring of some of the most personalised quasi-religious acid rock, but also in regular run-ins with the Texas fuzz.

Towards the end of February '69, Roky was arrested for pot possession, but found not guilty on the grounds of insanity! Reportedly, he was certified in March the same year as a schizo. A couple of months later, he went AWOL from the Austin State Hospital, was re-arrested and transferred to Ruck State Hospital, where his insanity tag was revoked.

In 1972, J. Grady Baskin M.D. recommended that Erickson be released from hospital, whilst Dr. J. A. Hunter is on record as stating:

"Patient was felt to be floridly psychotic at the time of admission here — psychosis on a toxic basis, due to multiple drug abuse. After admission he had a number of frequent visitors, including his mother, his attorney, and his girl friend, along with members of his musical group. Following these visits his psychosis became much worse and we began to suspect his visitors were smuggling drugs to him. Erickson is legally sane, but I feel he still requires hospitalization for the welfare and protection of himself and others."

FROM THE OUTSET, Erickson — whose literary diet was "evil" nightmare comics and '50s horror mags — had been totally obsessed with the supernatural and life on Mars.

He insisted that he was from another world.

"I have been pushed — or should I say rudely awakened — to believe that I am an alien. . . like from Mars."

"I've even had it notarized. A Notary Public had me swear it was true, so that I wouldn't be threatened by anyone who would think I was an alien and trying to hide it, thereby making it illegal."

Perish the thought!

To further corroborate this statement, Roky offered evidence. He said, that if correctly deciphered, the title of The Thirteenth Floor Elevators' first single "You're Gonna Miss Me" (recently re-issued on Radar) means, "You are gonna miss a Martian E."

You mean you didn't know?

But Erickson's importance isn't as some odd-ball geek like Wild Man Fischer or The Legendary Stardust Cowboy. Though never achieving more than cultist stature, both Erickson and the Elevators proved a crucial seminal influence on Robert Plant and Led Zeppelin at one pole and Tom Verlaine and Television at another.

Verlaine gave more than just lip-service. "Fire Engine", the first track on side two of "The Psychedelic Sounds Of The Thirteenth Floor Elevators" (another Radar re-issue), was a mainstay of Television's repertoire.

'ALIENS minus ROKY

Similarly, that professional name-dropper Patti Smith has given Erickson her personal seal of instant approval, shuffling his calling card in amongst those of Rimbaud, Richards, Tapper Zukie and Jesus.

An even more profound debt can be discovered in the terrain explored by Pere Ubu. A confirmed fan, the late Pete Laughner once wrote to a confidant:

" . . . had to write and tell you how much those Roky tracks mean to me. . . re-oriented my whole perspective on music. I mean back to where my original conceptions lay dormant after getting kicked in the face so many times by fuckheads who didn't/won't/can't relate to real rock 'n' roll with a twist."

The Thirteenth Floor Elevators were a power unto themselves, possessed with the same degree of manic intensity hitherto only found in the work of Them, but re-set in a Gothic atmosphere. Erickson sang like Van Morrison with a truss and against a backdrop of frazzled surf guitars, monotonous yet hypnotic rhythms and eerie cosmic morse code signals and static from electric jug-blower Tommy Hall.

LITTLE IS KNOWN of precisely what happened to Erickson from the time he was committed until he suddenly resurfaced in 1974 and released a Doug Sahn-produced single for the Mars label which coupled "Starry Eyes" with the unforgettable "Two Headed Dog".

"Two headed dog, two headed dog/I've been working in the Kremlin with a two headed dog."

A tour with The Sir Douglas Quintet followed before Erickson and his band Bleib Alien (Bleib being an anagram for Bible) cut a one-off single ("Bermuda"/"The Interpreter") for Jeff Gold's L.A.-based Rhino label — a single that kicked up sufficient interest for Virgin to hustle for the UK rights.

Soon after, a further three new tracks ("Mine Mine Mind", "Click Your Fingers Applauding The Play" and "I Have Always Been Here Before") plus "Two Headed Dog" were issued on the French-based Sponge label.

Though Bleib Alien's live shows attracted a lot of attention in the States, it wasn't always for the quality of their musical performance. Seemingly they were a bunch of pyromaniacs who dressed up as space cadets and set fire to the stage!

Still besotted with Mars, Moscow, the Devil, Chinese Alien Guitar (electric autoharp to you, mate) and other things far too abstract to comprehend, Roky and the Aliens (they'd dropped Bleib from their billing) began working the West Coast of California where they picked up encouraging reviews and baffling interviews and caught the imagination of former Creedance Clearwater Revival bassist Stu Cook and CCR administrator Bruce Young.

Together they recently set about producing master tapes of Roky and The Aliens in their Factory studios in Berkeley.

So far, four almost-completed tracks have emerged: "Mine Mine Mind", "I Walked With A Zombie", "The Wind And More" and "If You Have Ghosts".

Needless to say, Erickson has retained the doomy side of his persona though the psychedelic-smashed ethos that drenched the Elevators' work has been replaced with a tight early '70s rock feel which on "I Walked With A Zombie" is not dissimilar to the mood of the first Creedence LP. The Aliens cough up a few slick hooks whilst Roky sings in a voice somewhere between his more familiar Morrisonisms and what can best be described as a mournfully wasted Neil Young.

With Roky also turning his hand to guitar chores, The Aliens comprise Duane Aslaksen (guitar, vocals), Stephen Morgan Burgess (bass), Bill Miller (electric autoharp) and Fuzzy Furioso (drums).

An album is in the works, plus a possible deal with a British-based label. A British tour is being mooted for February or March.

The only problem that I can foresee is — if, as he insists, Roky is an alien, what passport does he travel on?

Does the psychedelic revival start here, or there or just to the left of the crossword?

ROCK'N'ROLL IS GOIN' TO THE DOGS

WE'RE NOT a punk band," says an indignant Mary Cadwell, bass player with The Dogs.

Well, sorry Mary, it's just that with song titles like "Slash Your Face" and "Fed Up", I had you figured for rich L.A. punks slumming around the UK buying leopard skin print pants from Kitch 22 and hoping some of the London magic would rub off.

I can see now that I was wrong.

They are wearing clean new levis, casual striped beach boy shirts and carrying those cute little travel wallets like all young American tourists sport. Only the occasional tattoo and earring betrays their rock roots.

We're sitting back stage at the York Pop Club as they wait to play their first gig in England, having just flown over from L.A. They've sold up everything to get here and are using this gig to test the water before the bigger splash of their London debut one week later.

It transpires that they originally come from Detroit. While still at high school, their drummer Ron Wood wandered into an MC5 gig with a head full of acid. It was a lethal combination that led him to want to form a band of his own. He got together with Mary, who was into early Motown bass riffs, and Louren Molinare, a guitarist, singer and part-time Blue Cheer freak.

The Dogs were formed in '71 and they moved to L.A. in '75. There they got together with other local acts The Pop, Motel and The Skin and formed Radio Free Hollywood. They all ran together, a kind of rock and roll gang that used each other for support and equipment and staged free gigs in the surrounding parks.

So why are you over here, Louren?

"Unless you're a signed band you have to play the bars and do Top 40 covers of Boston, Kansas and Aerosmith. The whole scene is totally plastic. The audience just sit and clap politely. We've come to find gigs to play and get some reaction."

But what about the local L.A. punk scene? Surely that has generated some street level energy?

Mary gives me a 'you should know better than that' look and explains.

"You must appreciate that there are lots of copy bands playing at London punks but they are not working class kids. It's trendy elitists who are the fashionable image. The night before the Pistols played their Winterland gig, Sid Vicious and Tony Sales, Iggy's old bass player, came down to the Whisky where they got up on stage and jammed with us. Search And Destroy and Slash magazine wouldn't review it 'cos we didn't fit into a new wave image. That's the way they are."

Oh well . . . we have a lot of people over here who seem to see themselves as second generation Warhol superstars — you'll find out about that soon enough.

The conversation wanders back to the MC5. Louren, who writes the songs, explains about "John Rock", a number he wrote as a tribute to John Sinclair.

"Sinclair was like the guru for the mid-West scene, preaching sex, drugs, free your mind, fuck in the street — and the CIA put him and the other leaders away and tried to turn them into what they were fighting against. The acid disappeared and that dumped a whole lot of downers and junk on the streets. You get 10 for selling acid, 10 to 15 for armed robbery, but only 2-3 for murder — it speaks for itself. They didn't want the streets full of stoned visionaries — it wasn't productive." So you don't mess with drugs then?

"We're still on our feet, aren't we?" says Mary. "We watched bands like the '5 and Iggy shooting up junk before going onstage and saw that all fall apart around us. John Sinclair just hangs around Detroit now running a jazz label and listening to Pharaoh Sanders records. He doesn't mess with white trash rock anymore. 'John Rock' is to free his head back to rock and roll."

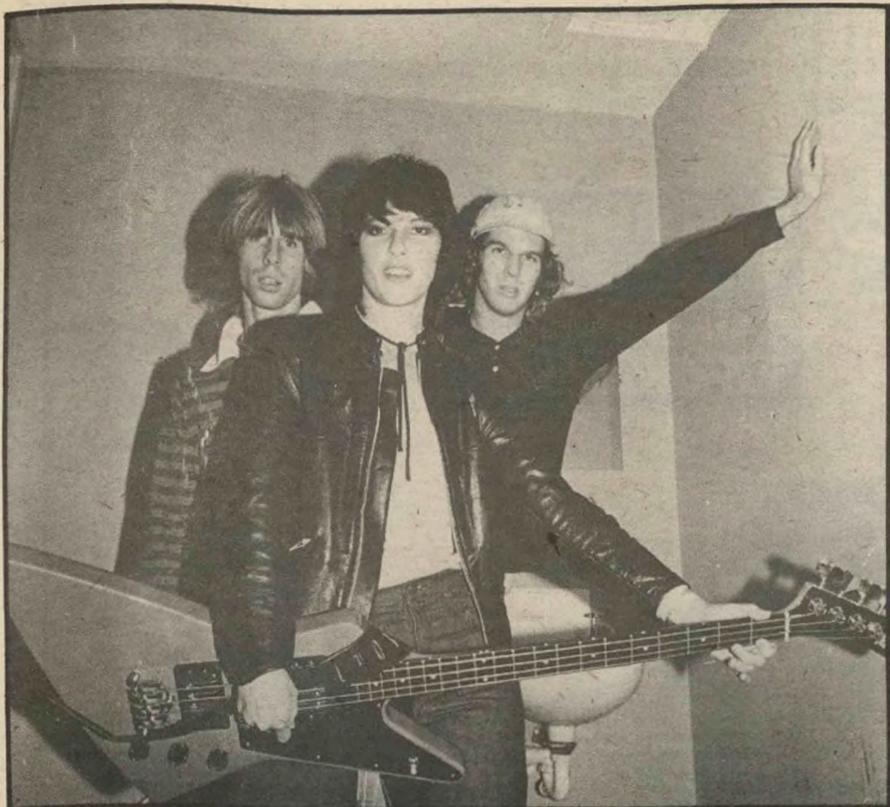

Ron and Mary wander off to do a sound check and I'm left talking to Louren. The EP they've just released is hard rock welded to dumb violent punk lyrics. I don't understand it. They aren't aggressive people.

They play a set of clear-eyed hard-driving American rock, more palatable than the HM dribblings of, say, Kiss or Van Halen' and display none of the popular bitter/cynical attitude prevalent in contemporary rock circles. I don't understand how they've managed to come through the '70s and still remain fresh and eager to play.

But I guess that's my problem.

RING OUT the false, ring in the true; ring out the old, ring in the new . . . and a happy New Year to all our readers from Archive Fun, although we here are more likely to be ringing in the old — in this case auld — at all times; it being the peculiar practice of this corner to involve itself with things antiquated and arcane. This week's antique: Jackie Dennis!

Who the —! is Jackie Dennis?

Two decades ago Jackie Dennis was celebrated in this same weekly chronicle as the Highland Hiccough, Thane of Wardour, Prince of Denmark Street; and was to be seen regularly on telly pop show 6.5 Special, alongside such anarchic punks as The Frantic Five, Freddie Mills, Joan Regan, Johnny Dankworth, and The King Bros.

It was in 1958 that 15-year-old Jackie from Edinburgh soared up the NME charts with the falsetto charms of "Lah Dee Dah":

"I'm glad, so glad, so-ho glad you are-hah you hoo-hoo, we're gonna go-ho-ho-ho to the ABC to do the XYZee of love, it's true 'cause me got you. Lah dee dah. Oh boy. Let's go. Cha cha cha . . ."

"Lah Dee Dah", as well as giving Jackie Dennis his first chart success, also proved thankfully his last, at which time he changed his name to Alan Gilzean, achieving some fame as a footballer, and ended up like all rock casualties writing for NME, where we affectionately refer to him as Angus MacKinnon.

Should auld acquaintance be forgot and days of auld Don Lång.

 artist then presenting it to said artist's manager for veto before it goes into print.
 It's a situation that doesn't exist in this country, but people over here still tend to grab for the same old life-buoy when it's discovered that the brave new raft has got dry-rot.
 Especially since the death of well-known Las Vegas cabaret artist Elvis Presley there's been an irrational, cloying affection for the Old Guard, tempered with just a hint of panic over the fact that these days, if one wants to remain true to the heroes of one's youth, The Future Is Pushing Forty.
 Angus McKinnon and Charbe Murray are lovely geezers both, but after reading their reviews of "Street Legal" and "Some Girls" respectively, who among us can honestly say they didn't feel like screaming Judas! at them across the editorial room? We know we can't.
 Both reviews had a hymn-like quality. Bad Ass Blast justifying the Stones with "What the hell, this is rock and roll, not children's television," while the Gentle Jock commented: "At his best, as here, Dylan's able to effortlessly generalise the particular and particularise the general. Be grateful for his gift."
 "Street Legal" and "Some Girls" were important product for the manufacturers concerned — Dylan and the Stones are strictly mid-management commercially. These two albums hung around the charts for 15-20 weeks with global tour back-up, which is Boney M., Boomtown Rats, Don Williams territory, with as many units to sell again to get into the ELO, Bee Gees, Meatloaf league — you guessed it, Robert Stigwood will never ask Mick and Keith to deck themselves out in skin-tight black and blonde wigs to giggle and cuddle their way through a furlair together singing "You're That One That I Want."

 And if Bob don't make it to the CBS honour-roll, you know Meatloaf will!
BOTH "STREET Legal" and "Some Girls" appeared within blatantly bluish hard-sell marketing manoeuvres, unprecedented in either career — sound business tactics designed to obliterate the public memory of everything from silly clothes to punk to ignoring the British audience to pathetic live albums to the previous years of hardcore-fan trash like "Desire" and "It's Only Black And Blue Goatshead Soup."
 While Dylan thought being New Wave meant you were Arlo Guthrie, Jagger did make a colossal effort to be fast and dirty, seeing his own selling-point (shock, swearing, parent-hatred, violence) modelled as the decade's new-improved working-class Goatshead on a different body, fearful that he might be edged out of his own market.
 In interviews he was hostile to punk, claiming he'd done it all 15 years ago, so to make up for lost controversy, "Some Girls" was as subtle as Bianca with her bosom bared to be bored in Studio 54 — the most deprived, debauched, dangerous social outlaws who ever rode shotgun along that wild rock'n'roll trail, the most outrageous fucker-stars to ever bear a slave girl to death whilst DJ-ing just because they'd done everything else twice and got bored. Vicarious thrill, a-plenty, from the bedroom to the boardroom and back again.
 Harold Robbins but hip.
 Dylan was a French Symbolist Tom Jones singing "It's Not Unusual" for the 1,000th time, the lyrical pyrotechnics, provocative imagery and visions of Dante's Inferno in post-Watergate/Nam Nixon America modelled around an album of swinging single heart-pouring not seen and savoured since "Blood On The Tracks."

 And what with the gentle giant's marriage coughing up white feathers AND what with Him playing live in the U.K. for the first time in 1978, it could be as dramatic as Christ croaking up during the feeding of the 5,000. Awe, anyone?
 But what about the music? If these bastards didn't make the music this argument wouldn't exist.
 The music? It stinks.
 Just boring, poetic, spoilt-brat, disposable bilge. Just like approximately 95 per-cent of all records, films, books etc produced in the Western World.
 But this is different! It's DYLAN and THE STONES. It's DIFFERENT isn't it?
 Well, yeah, if you need it to be, if you close your eyes and concentrate really hard. Dylan and the Stones both appeal to an audience largely between 27 and 37 (Bob's age) who believed back in the lush swinging '60s that they would always be young, would never be caught in a humdrum wage-slave existence, would never end up like the man at the bus-stop.
 But everyone has to catch the bus, and when the lazy ones come home at night they like to put a Dylan album on the stereo, it makes them feel young and powerful again while consoling them that even Bob The God goes through divorces in squalid rooms and comes out of it all older and wiser, his white robes still radiant, justifying and dismissing everything by putting it down to "experience".
 Their leisure-time is spent listening to the sound-track of the life-style.
 Bob even made a film for them, lasting four hours and called Renaldo and Clara, with the camera lingering lovingly (the only love in the movie) on inanimate objects, many mid-games and much word-wanking, in which all the women (Sara Dylan and Joan Baez included) pantomimed enigmatic whores.

 Rather than hurt Bob's feelings, most critics pretended not to understand it enough to pass judgement. But the Financial Times said it was probably the most important film of 1978.
 On "Street Legal" Dylan's night-club croaking mimics the hyper-subjectivity of "Blood On The Tracks" but is a still-born gross travesty of that open wound. This is a stick-on scab oozing stage-makeup pus, a hollow plastic ugly face, a man with bleeding heart, stiff upper lip and jowls trembling through a megaphone, "Wow, don't I write great about personal relationships?"
 Bob Dylan chasing the elusive butterfly of love "Is Your Love In Vain?" moves as breezily as a slug with a limp, a verbose Andy Capp cross-examining a potential hausfrau to ensure she's everything a woman should be — Virgin Mary, Mona Lisa, Jezebel the Butler and Mom. "Can you cook and sew? Make flowers grow? Do you understand my pain?"
 "That's the kind of woman men want, not an airline pilot," Dylan has said of his laughably smug lyric.
 Of course, a woman who is used only to cook and sew must want her opposite — a strong, a silent Westerner, a Peckinpah man.
 On "Baby Stop Crying" Dylan sounds like a mental patient who knows his woman will stop weeping if he can get her to give him his gun.
 Is he a woman-hater? Only if Son of Sam was a misogynist. He ain't one of them women-libbers, that's for sure!
 "True Love Tends To Forget" is another chattered drivel, a moon-June spoon, Dylan singing "Don't sell me out" like a 50-year-old ad executive who "smokes" at the weekend and says "No Way", "Hassle" or — at a pinch — "Nice one." Appropriately, it features courteously waiting "trendy" guitars.
 "Where Are You Tonight (Journey Through Dark Heat)" reckons that "Tangled Up In Blue's" tune was so damn neat it deserves to be used again and again.
 The song starts words like "cleanliness" and "purity", and Dylan agonisingly chants "Where are you tonight?" like the jealous Dad in Briquet Of Barbed Wire.
 But the real killer here is "We Better Talk This Over", a revealing confession that doesn't try to protect a thing, reaching a dramatic, almost cathartic climax with the memorable rhyme "You must understand/I'm only a man/Doing the best that I can". Phew!
 The sensitive love interest aside, Dylan has lost tracks in which to establish himself as son of the soul (ie. Woody), artistic political romanticism (all right, Allen, me son) and (twice) golden-haired, poet-sage on a rock'n'roll stage tormented by his perceptions.
 "New Pony" is a plodding blues sounding like a Patsy Smith fan stole the tune from someone called Blind Boy Lemon and then added mock-mystic lyrics.
 "Senor (Tales Of Yankee Power)" is supposed to be a cutting indictment of '70s American Imperialism, but just resembles a tired and emotional soundtrack to a movie starring Anthony Quinn as a greasy Mex.
 "No Time To Think" is Dylan as an infuriatingly functionless hard, dangling a Tarot (card) for all the wicker analysts and featuring references to The Magician and The Empress (among others — Ed.), stringing together a shopping list of impressive nouns — "Ecstasy, tyranny, liberty/socialism, patriotism, materialism" — like a concise blurb-writer on a Jackie Collins blockbuster.

 Which leaves the one non-runt of "Street Legal's" litter, "Changing Of The Guards" — though even this, after the first two words ("16 years" — the time that has passed since Dylan cut his first album), degenerates into worthless Dylanisms: "renegade priests", "good shepherds", and "the King and Queen Of Swords". Plus metaphorical fingers to useless organisations and other cryptic crap, all of it ripe for endless hours of pompous interpretation for all you Students Union debating societies.
 The musicians' shambolic attempts to provide a backdrop of regal pomp, grandeur and dignity to Dylan's ranting could well be used for a sentimental Steeleye Span concept album based on Robin Hood's boyhood in Olde Englande — all hey nonny no and round the maypole go.

his Whitehouse style organisation PUSH put pressure on Atlantic Records radio stations from the States saying that if the Stones were forced to drop the last word of speech is being uttered (I'm sure Mick would love to see that).
 Gosh, so much attention lavished on what's a minor act than a badly constructed rock song.
 Look, it's not even the way it is. Attempts to German Greer scolding Jagger sings "I'm not a car/American girl who's everything in the world/possibly imagine."
 That's just a stupid! Isn't this sharper, more correct? — "I'm not a car/American girl who's everything in the world/ up in singles bars."
 There's also stuff about Marsha Hunt leaving babies but I guess if you wanted the News Of The World you'd be reading it.
 Those hoary old Stones chestnuts — a hard drug vocation, sado-masochism, sexual Scrabble in the press — are all here in easily discernible riffs from earlier times.
 "Before They Make Me Run" is Keef's affirmation of his liberty, innocence and free spirit (yawn). The tune is "Happy". His voice sounds reedy and shot-through as he tries to be a dignified old French artist... maybe the Scarlet Pimpernel escaping the guillotine. He sounds like...
 One can imagine doddering wore "Keef Is Innocent" badges grooving around in their bedrooms with a screwdriver little joints they've saved up for specially celebrating the night Keith was let off.
 One is very sad.
 One wonders if sand dollars realise it is unlikely they will be shown the same mercy. The court showed Keef-boy if he were caught with a full box of Hedex.
 "Respectable" is "Rock Off", a nifty "Exile" riff for sure — although on "Some Girls" there's far too many guitars and none of them played anything like adequately. "Respectable" would make Hugh Hefner ejaculate all over this month's centre-spread staples.
 Bianca and Gerald Ford's son, Mrs Trudeau backstage with the Stones, and Mick hates them all — underpin Stonesism as an opening flashing brilliance with some sardonic self-examination of the few corners of the album where the Stones are trying to get you to gasp at shock and it's great.
 "Well, now we're responsible society. We just worry about the things that we need to do." They can't keep it up, of course. Jagger just can't jam.
 "When The Whip Comes Down" is part for the coming the pumping ranch bit of "Hand Of Fate" on the "It's Only Black And Blue" album and 2500 E.M. whip-lip service. As exhilarating as hearing The Clash sing about a Whip, or Tower-Blook.
 So far, so familiar. The Stones have put everything into "Some Girls" and it's very much at all.
 You've met "Tougher" already, remember the cover of The Tempest? "Tougher" is a magic Motown gem — "I'm Too Proud To Beg" butchers another Motown great. "Just My Imagination" is too fast, too loose, too pub-rock. Christ, it's like Count Heshop's "The O'X My Hopes" — Why do you bother?
 Sorry, all you devil worshippers and armchair Marxists, no need of revolution this time out just a hamfisted Country & Western parody — "Faraway Eyes", that wounds like Keef's Friedman and The Texas Jewboys' roadies playing before a pig. It's not even funny.
 "Miss You" is a subtle like 'Plus Rien A Dire' which has the most typical disco drumming and bass, a soul guitar and a few rip-offs of the Michael Zager Band, the words are still here!"

"Nothing left to say/That's the wild bunch song/Dedicated to the boys who kill themselves/You find them in the hairbreak hotel/Empty pill bottle by the hand/Nothing left to us."

Marie and her Gargons sing in French, with derivative words coming straight out of our romantic ancestors, whether you call them Rimbaud or Lautremont.

AT THIS point some readers may be finding this story rather long. "What do we care about the Froggies, mate?"

I've got no axe to grind. But as someone who listens to both productions (timey and frog) I must admit I'd rather have some French groups on my turntable than those goddamned (fill the blanks with your most hated old wave group) or bloody (that one is for power pop).

Cause it's new wave, even if it's French. It's not just good old rock 'n' roll. Not even Little Bob Story stuff. And I love Bob! If he alone hadn't toured this country for ages, some people out there would have actually died without seeing a live band in their lives!

That's the kinda fight we must win!

Imagine a country bigger than England, with no rock radio, two rock monthlies, a few shows in Paris, and NOTHING ELSE!

Before we get any further, I can only recommend the following records: STARSHOOTER: the "Get Baque" single on EMI France, and the LP "Starshooter" on the same label; MARIE ET LES GARGONS: two singles, but the second one, "Attitude" (on Spy Records) has a really moving side, "Re-Bop". Hit quality,

BUT WHAT about Paris, you might ask? The kids there have seen concerts — the Pistols, Clash, Stranglers, Damned, Heartbreakers, Siouxsie, Gen X, Jam — they all played Paris. What effect did they have on Les Jeunes Parisiens? Well like London or New York, Paris is a capital. Which means a hype-city. And while all the Lyonnais were actually getting ready, and writing songs, and playing, Paris groups just "made the scene". Which means they played rarely and broke-up often, before actually delivering the goods. Hype and lack of method, that's Paris.

There was also the lack of places to play (only recently a club, the Rose Bonbon, opened to guarantee a concert every night). And I'm not even talking of the lack of places to rehearse! Even today the most famous Parisian groups are known to rehearse in the recording studios.

Who are they, anyway? Two names: Telephone and Bijou. And neither is really a Paris group — they're from the suburbs.

One night, three years ago, I was sitting — stoned — in a fellow writer's place right at the far end of Paris's southern suburbs. It was a Sunday evening and we were playing the guitar solo game. You know the one — you play records, competing to give the best guitar solo you can imagine . . . Right after my buddy played "Run Run Run" by the Velvets I put on "I'm Loose" by The Stooges (winning easily) when the bell rang.

In comes another rock critic. Old "Almost 28" And he mimoges a group from Jersey by the name of Bijou.

He opens a bag, produces a small tape recorder:

"Do you want to hear my band?"

He turns off "Fun House", right in the middle of "Dirt" (1971), and presses the red button.

From that moment I hated Bijou. Imagine a rock trio with three guys playing the best rock 'n' roll riffs — mechanical, steady, immaculate rock. And then the words: "Look at that lady/She's a bitch all right/If you wanna lay her/You gotta pay the price." And then, the solo: Chuck Berry 51 revisited.

We sat, silent. Three years later — and Bijou have achieved very good sales. Their two dumb LPs on Phonogram are full of that typical suburban temptation: rock 'n' roll played in such a MOR way that it can be aired on radio.

Bijou want to be part of that system that calls itself show-business. That's why they keep hunting the hit.

That's why I prefer them live. Because on stage they do deliver. Palmer, their guitarist, is an impersonation of Wilko, but SHY! He sometimes runs behind his amps to play an intro! And the others just look like rats.

Frogs like them. But then, they like Telephone even more! And specially the first Telephone LP which — my goodness — sold 80,000 copies. A gold record, in fact.

Telephone first played in June '77, opening at the Olympia for Television. That very day The Sex Pistols were trashing the Jubilee on their Queen Elizabeth boat, and I was with them.

But my girlfriend told me everything.

It seems Telephone came on stage — three nice young fellows and a girl on bass — and played some boogie that had everyone on their feet.

They encoored with "Jumpin' Jack Flash"

The audience even kept yelling "Telephone! Telephone!" throughout Verlaine's set. So in the end he played "Satisfaction" and went out.

Two months later Telephone got a recording deal from EMI (again) and went to Eden Studio in London.

Their LP is full of hits. They almost had three number ones in a row. But it's also full of Stones, and Quo and Berry stolen riffs. And the words! Nice French slang, all turning around "the flip and the flipper" the subway, etc.

They sold so many records they became the first "new wave" (hum) group able to tour France on their own. And they filled houses all summer.

They also sold so many records they became able to buy as much of anything as they wanted — so much, indeed, that they're rumoured to be unable to write a second epipe.

But they're stars alright. They found the perfect way to make French hearts bleed. When they appear on TV (a privilege they share with no other new groups) they look strangely regular, with their long hair, their Gibsons and their histrionic drummer. One of them sometimes wears a leopard skin jacket.

BUT LET'S get back to the more regular new wave. Let's take the ten o'clock train back to Paris. Let's not stop by Pigalle right now, my friend, it's full of hookers who just love English men. You'll have plenty of time to get back there on your own. Right now I wanna tell you about our three French 'summers of hate'.

Summer '76: groups form like you snap your fingers — Strike Up, Loose Heart, European Son, Pain Head, Asphalt Jungle. The last will be the only group to survive the impact of the two Pistols shows at the Chalais du Lac. Them and Stinky Toys, who played the celebrated 100 Club festival of that summer.

However, from their ashes rises the legend — Punk exists, vramment. Of course, there's no club, no concerts and no possibility of any. The French rock press is still hooked on Hot Tuna and the Stones.

But in September, October, November, all the English punk groups come to Paris and play. The toys become official new wave leaders (and sign with Polydog), and a second generation sees the light: Man Ray, Metal Urbain, Contingent Anonymous.

Synthesizers are already to be seen — in fact, some of these groups play versions of "Anarchie En France" on them — and the club where it happens is the Gibus. Punk is the word. Asphalt Jungle make a single, so do Metal Urbain Parties follow parties, and the whole Parisian fashion and design scene is convinced punk is "in".

French cinema people are jealous of this particular New Wave and literature jumps on the bandwagon (there were almost more "French punk books" than "French punk singles").

As the books won't (fortunately) be translated, I suggest you get a copy of the first Metal Urbain single, "Pank" (Rough Trade has plenty).

During '77 some very good singles had blossomed. My faves were issued on Skydog Records, all with covers by Bazooka's terrorist team of graphic designers who immediately fell in love with the punk thing. Their graphics WERE already punk, anyway, and with Loulou and Kiki Picasso, Olivia and Nanor and Lulu Larsen, they tore the traditional comic scene always very important in France to pieces.

These characters were serious. An example: Lulu Larsen burned his arm of sheer nihilism, not with the traditional cigarette but with an electric iron! He went to the hospital, but not before Kiki Picasso had taken plenty of pictures of the badly injured limb plus some outrageous shots of Lulu kissing his iron.

Those stories made us believe Bazooka were the ONLY French punk group. But then again, you have to realise there was no French rock scene before punk.

So it might be worth listening to "Plante Comme Un Prive" (Struck Like A Shamus") by Asphalt Jungle Patrick Eudeline, ex-rock critic, together with Kiki Darling (guitar) and a couple of rockers made a great opus of this little song. The lyrics could've been Raymond Chandler's.

It might also prove worthwhile to check 1984's single "Driven by the terrific Henry Flesh, this band are a monstrous metallic overdose, causing your ears just like they used to do in Detroit.

One night late June I went to a studio to see a new group of four girls rehearse. Their name was The Lou's they'd just had all their equipment stolen and seemed likely to be absolute rubbish.

But they managed to play two or three songs. And that was it. CBS signed only days later.

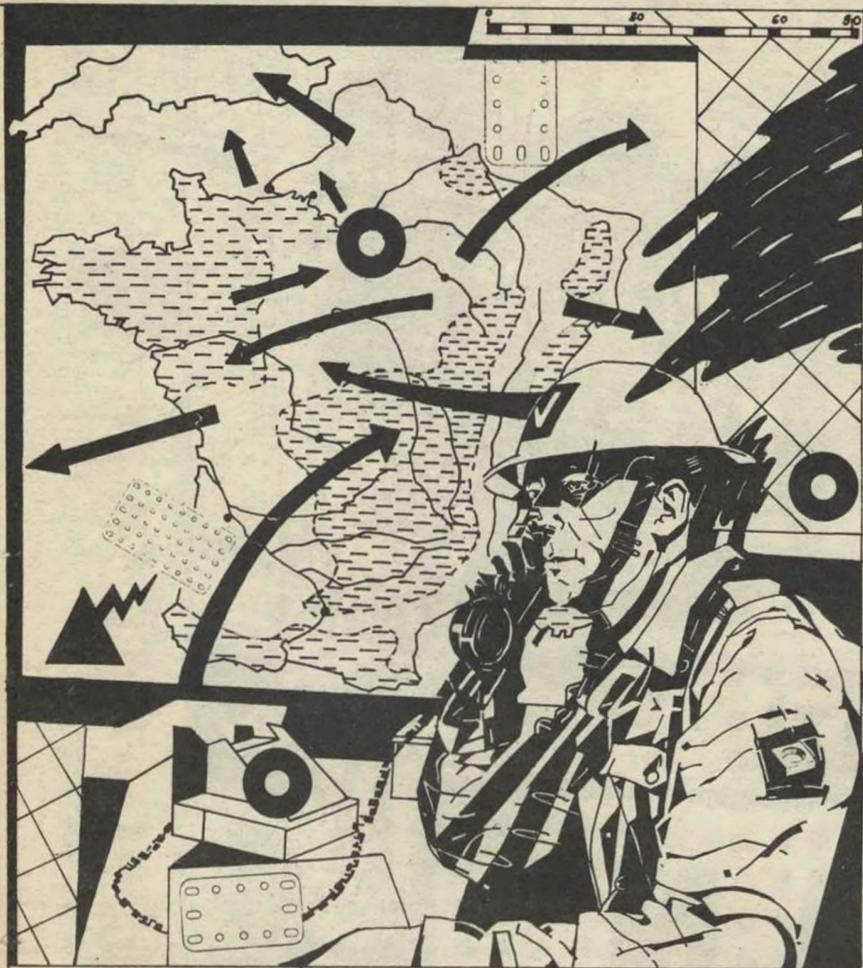

They went almost immediately to England with The Clash, and learned to become real house-shakers.

BY THE start of '78 things started to look bad. Record companies were wondering silently about the "potential" of all these new groups they'd added to their roster.

And when the Pistols broke up they started to fire them one after the other. At the time Starspooter were recovering from their "Get Baqué" flop and finding very few gigs. Stinky Toys had played two concerts in six months to promote their album, Asphalt were desperately looking for a decent record contract, and groups like Guilty Razors (four Spanish kids) and Gazoline were having enormous difficulties.

Metal Urban chose exile in your country.

French punks and they're even more naive than yours were falling into the great local temptation of politics. Fueled on The Clash's example, the leaders were mouthing dumb lines in the belief that they could change society with three-minute songs and slogans on their shirts.

From that awful period — when groups would almost kill for the privilege of opening for The Jam — came two very good French products.

First, Bazooka persuaded a leftist newspaper to let them do a graphic "punk terrorist" magazine. And it was great — maybe the one Richard Hell has been dreaming of for ages. Called Un Regard Moderne ("a modern Look"), it came out on good quality paper in newspaper size.

Each page was like a poster and related one political event from the past month. So on 30 pages, you had all the 'actualities of the month' exploding in a remarkable and completely original style.

Whether the event was the Pistols' break-up or some prime minister's dumb declaration, Bazooka destroyed everything, specially your brain cells, and cleaned the whole mess.

Un Regard Moderne lasted eight months then the pressure became too much. The leftists felt the line was not adequately revolutionary, and also didn't much like the Bazooka way of looking at their own little games. But while it lasted the mag was like a hand-grenade. You bought it at your own risk, and nobody knew if you'd recover.

On a record level, it all came back to the beginning: Skydog records, whose complete story is too long to tell here, had an ideal — let's ask all these bands to contribute one song each to a compilation. And most of the groups jumped at the opportunity.

You can still find the resulting album — "Skydog Commandoes" — anywhere in Britain, and here's what you get:

Starshooter do a fake "Sweet Jane" under a fake name, The Scooters. Bijou deliver a freeing instrumental, a rocker that leaves no glass in your windows and which I consider to be their best recording. It's called "Last Nite" and because of contractual commitments it's played under the name Puravida.

You also have a live Asphalt Jungle track, "Money", that soon fades into "Brand New Cadillac", the Vince Taylor classic. Jean Pierre Kalfon (named after a famous movie-star) make their recording debut with a macho trucker song, "Camion". Electric Callas, still fully stuck in their Stoogian memories, offer "Kill Me Two Times."

Other nuggets include Calcinator (the French Motorhead) and Rocking Rebels (The Parisian rockabilly guv'nors).

Just back from England. The Lous had found that CBS wanted to reshape them into a MOR girlie show. They broke the contract and recorded "Back In The Street", one of their best songs.

"Skydog Commandoes" sold quite well, much to the delight of both the groups involved and of Skydog president Marc Zermati, who had produced the whole scam.

Summer came and things seemed to change for the better.

Asphalt Jungle signed with EMI and immediately the four rockers flew to London where they spent all their money on dumb jackets and crazy guitars. Eudeline bought himself a white Gretsch which he proudly presented as "the same as Eddie Cochran's". EMI France, who had been waiting for them to come into the studios straight after Starshooter to record an elpee, were not pleased to see their new hope vanish to Britain without even leaving a phone number.

But the main thing during this summer was the appearance of a French punk show on the radio. Station Europe Number One took a chance on a guy by name of Pogo who each night, for an hour, aired a show that would have made John Lydon proud.

Yelling, screaming, raping the listener with incredible noises, he played an amazing new-wave assortment. And suddenly it all started to fit together: Starshooter and Suicide and Clash and Iggy and Penetration made a wonderful bash, an explosion all over again.

Every newspaper jumped furiously on the show, giving Pogo immense coverage. The unfortunately, one Saturday night, the guy had the impudence to mock Shell, whose tanker the Amoco Cadiz happened to be polluting our Bretagne. The next day, the show was shut down.

Pogo was removed and his place given to a dumb impersonator who eventually committed suicide on the air in August by playing Kiss.

Anyway, Summer '78 was transcended by two events of importance: two punk festivals. The first was at the Olympia. Gazoline, Guilty Razors, Asphalt, Stinky Toys, The Lous and Electric Callas sold the place out, and the whole evening turned into a magical battle of the bands.

After a few okay performances, Starshooter arrived, and were clearly the best. Firstly, they all dressed in communist chic — Maoist that is — with red T-shirts proclaiming the death of 'paper tigers'. After two songs Kent Hutchinson got crazy and during "35 Tonnes" (a trucker song) got Marie France (an infamous transvestite) on stage and invited her to striptease — which she did.

Starshooter became a riot machine, exhorting the public to "tear this old place to pieces", and provided the perfect punk satori. They encored with a Johnny Halliday song and were called back four times.

The Lous almost matched them with their Seeds number, "Pushin' Too Hard", and the Olympia went bananas.

Three weeks later, the whole thing happened again in Lyon. But this time the big names were there: Little Bob Story, Bijou, Telephone . . . and Rockpile.

Located in a sweltering Roman Arena, the Lyon festival was one of the best I have ever witnessed. Rockpile were brilliant, but couldn't please Kent Hutchinson. When Starshooter went on stage he made a speech insulting Dave Edmunds:

"Dat fucking limey, pretending to be some kinda member of rock aristocracy, just cause he's English! I didn't know there was an aristocracy in rock!"

Starshooter's set was down on their Olympia performance but still Kent went berserk, jumping in the audience, insulting people and destroying Beatles fans with "Get Baqué".

The highlight, however, was Marie Et Les Garçons' set. As soon as they started to pulse their new disco beat empty beer cans started to fly. It came to the point where the sky was dark with cans and they played in a rain of beet. They did their medley ("Macho

Silverest Screens of '78

In a year when 82 million people went to the cinema, SILVER SCREEN suggests 10 good reasons why the movies are becoming a habit again.

● SATURDAY NIGHT FEVER and GREASE, besides establishing new plateaus for big buck potential, launched the undoubted face of '78 in John Travolta. He mugged and mumbled in the grand tradition of Da Method and, once again, it worked. To soundtracks that perfectly encapsulated the mood of the moment, Travolta stole hearts young and old, won knickers wet and dry. Amidst the hoopla, disco was launched, the re-styled '50s came back home and Travolta developed a street style which was emulated on pavements all over the world. The Alan Carr — Robert Stigwood marriage allied a refurbished Hollywood image with a ruthless attention to balance sheets which made even the majors sit up and take notice. Merchandising, once a novelty concept, became This Year's Thing — and will remain so for a while yet.

● CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE THIRD KIND struck such a resounding chord in so many hearts and minds because Steven Spielberg (a far likelier heir to John Ford's Great White Populist mantle than Peter Bogdanovich) dared to suppose that we earthlings, weary of cynicism and corruption, would wish to embrace alien star children. The direct antithesis of Kubrick's misanthropic 2001 (humans as dumb, unworthy recipients of extra-terrestrial assistance), Close Encounters was also a neat antidote to the hysterically anti-commie SF flicks of the Cold War '50s.

● MIDNIGHT EXPRESS was the first major movie of recent years to deal (sic) with drugs, a taboo subject previously considered worthy only of film-makers with a habit. Its brutal characterisation of the Turks brought censure from many critics but the extreme shock tactics served to ram home the message. Although financed with American greenies, it was made by a British crew, spearheaded by accomplished director Alan Bugsy Malone Parker. In that respect, it represents one of the few occasions that a British film-maker has broken big in America — with a vengeance.

IN THE TOWN

Public Image Ltd.

On the first day of Christmas brothers and neon children of the sun. Amused — left me with sunny smiles as he to follow John and a year in his latest image. This is religion!
 Without fail, the Finbury men came back on the stage, seemingly more interested than ever.
 Instead, again was a moment as people huddled together in peeks, and watched each other goad.

And then, again, they did the same. They did it so much so that I am reluctant to say
 it was a drop of the control and that stage was a year ago. It was a second Basement Five, in comparison with Public Image, and taking their debut performance.

They are Equators vocalise themselves. Basement Five proved capable, if somewhat ragged, with a very busy set, of which
 "Blood Sweat & Tears" and
 "Sweet Don" stood out. In a familiar vein, Linton gave Johnson some well-deserved attention in performing "A Small, Slow Confession" section of the album with his readings of the lyrics of "Blood Sweat & Tears" and
 "Sweet Don" and other great, hard and blood sweat.

At one point a disgruntled and somewhat nervous audience member approached Mr Johnson and said he'd "fuck off" in a vulgar way.

That's all you can do? You're not a fuck, in general laughter and applause.

The strains of William Walker of the Tribe of Judah brought his attention to the "sweet man" was the cue for Public Image's first ever appearance in the city.

All sorts of the apparent contradictions — or more accurately because of them — suggest that the single dynamic personality to change in rock during the 70s.

More than this, he is also the focus of all the aspirations and some fears of those who would like to be like him. People that are looking for a way to be like him. People that
 are looking for a way to be like him. People that
 are looking for a way to be like him.

And then it was over.
 Public Image, in the person of their leader, have the charisma and power most bands would envy. But on the showing John failed to captivate on his audience who he had in the palm of his hand for most of the set. The difference was — in Lydon's own terms — between "the way they were and the way they should have been".
 Even so, a working class hero is something to be proud of.

Elvis Costello And The Attractions Richard Hell And The Voidoids John Cooper-Clarke

Dominion Theatre

Welcome to the working week, seven nights of Elvis Costello at London's Dominion Theatre, virtually opposite the location of the Elvis musical.

Will the real Elvis please stand up?

Adding to these odd little twists of rock icon images was the presence of John Cooper-Clarke, most of whose set your reporter failed to catch thanks to inconsistencies in published touring times.

His arrival found Manchester's sharp raucous of everyday lobbies stopping with a gasp but loud howls.
 The tangible lack of feedback subtracted from our John's usually heated delivery. His vivid depictions of what it's like to hallucinate in the local Tesco were suffocated by an air of formality, the curse of a great, popular act.

But then the pace of the evening was such that there could be no mistaking whose night it was. As Richard Hell found out, this was Elvis' crowd almost to a man, or to a woman...

Strange how some members of the fanzine set are attracted to men who make no attempt to hide their managers (like Jean-Jacques Much as I sympathise with Elvis' painful gut-downs of girls who get suckered by the slick wig, the worn's-eye view of human relationships sticks mostly gilly.

Elvis, on the receiving end of so many crushing blows
 from so many callous females an intrinsic part of his appeal to both camps would make a genuine star for the Male Sex movement.

But I digress. Richard Hell
 As The Voidoids' set was short and fierce. And although their leader's leering derisive stage moves and off-the-wall between song repeats fell on mostly stony ground, he looked indisputably happy.

On all but three songs he detailed bass riffs to one half of their new rhythm section recruits, who were audibly sweating to hold on to the recorded speed of more familiar cuts, and came close to dragging "Bank Generation" to a relative standstill.

That, however, is a minor quibble. In truth the one moment that threatened to cut loose from the evening's orderly procession was when The Voidoids lurched through their howling and braying version of "I Wanna Be Your Dog".

Elvis came on stage at precisely 10 o'clock, some 30 minutes later he opened for the first time, making a welcome dig at the crowd's disposition with "I feel like I ought to do no shirt and be up" which he did.

Costello and his never less than superlative sideman spent most of '78 on the road, mostly in America, where his punky but chic persona and other favourable factors have continued to make him the one British Springsteen. But for a market that was long ago sold, the benefits of all that rigorous touring are simply an added right and professionalism.

They work hard, perhaps too hard. The music moves faster than the words, with missing odd dynamics on, for example, "Red Shoes". Yet all thanks to the agility of The Attractions, making a new one for, in particular, "No Dancing".

A handful of songs from "Armed Forces" scattered in the set were well-received.
 They're up into the blazing attack of Elvis' gallery of unbridled anarchy. Sey good-bye to the man who would benignly defy expectations by playing virtually a whole show of unrecorded songs. There's scant sense of a person
 bursting with his muse.
 Instead there's a nagging feeling that the muse has become just a package —
 an addition.

The lights, for instance,
 were so dimly lit
 underlined the mood of up art colour that resembled a set of Warhol's Monroe silk screens.
 Towards the end, people were applauding these effects — always a bad sign.

A worse sign still was the audience-baiting suggested by Elvis' remarks. "Let's have a riot!" he shouted at one point.
 The next song was "Punk Is Up". How ironic. But we did as we were asked. Through
 "Lipstick Vogue", through
 "Onesies", through
 "Washing The Whites",
 through "You Belong To Me" right through to the encore of "Radio Radio".

All this, but no surprise.
 And I was saddened.
 Because whenever Elvis
 danced in that brick-kneed limb-failing way of his, I couldn't help thinking he looked like a person trying to stand still on a conveyor belt.

The Jam

Music Machine

Dozing at the back of the lower layer of the multi-tiered Music Machine I couldn't help wondering what it is to be charming, chillingly nostalgic and contemporary. That sounds like a combination of Peter Gabriel and Julie Andrews.

But not Lo This is The Jam, says the survey, and who am I to argue? One who fears the street, who frowns at suits, who abhors witless sloganeering.

Who, indeed? The Jam onstage. A lot of space, for leaping and roaming. Abrasive and systematic lights, bouncing off and brashly pampering three strictly garbed stiff-limbed musicians who grasp and grope polished, sparkling instruments. Tautly animated, wilfully anguished, The Jam's unyielding antics depress — barely elaborated-upon standard rock choreography delivered with humourless, almost weary, cool.

As with all successful rock groups their show is primarily about effect, impact and assault — rigidly rehearsed and numbing.

The Jam are cold, old fashioned — and enormously effective.

Their's is the plodding world: bright, clear, nothing to fear. Clipped tales of decay, destruction, viciousness and violence sound as distant and vacuous as the World Service news. All the appealing abstractions zealously attributed to The Jam — power, passion, poetry — are at best feeble frameworks.

They're a shadow of what it's claimed they are (and purport to be), such shallowness is empty disguised live by their major asset — artificial presence. Hollow myth helps, too. Look hard and see right through them.

Their songs — some singles, some not, a half hook and a careful slogan usually the distinction — were rammed out smooth and established. Forceful chords, neat bass, specific drums, raucously apt vocals, it's a dense sound, with little colour but much detail. Their earnest, ritualistic ditties lack, due to contrivance and pride, any fun or frivolity, and thus any actual substance, or at least something that seems proper projected with all the empty extravagance that is the Jam show.

The crude seduction of the stage show is an odd way to present their fastidiously-serious brutal ballads, but then The Jam ultimately are confused and contradictory, disciplined only in dress and musicianship.

I looked for might, tenderness, insight. What did I get? Blast, flash, debris, emptiness, no fun. I got wary parody. The Jam don't stretch imagination, they suffocate it.

The Jam's reputation is the dots of an intriguing ideal (a majestic, lyrical power trio) joined ridiculously prematurely.

Where do The Jam go from here? Wherever they're sent? They just get better? They can only get better.

The Gang of Four, using the same instruments, proved the potential and genuine power of rock with a short, subtly-disorientating set crammed with alert, evocative songs that dripped with mood and atmosphere without resorting to drowning lights, sexually orientated pantomime and fancy footwear. Their songs scratched, stretched, absorbed, as delightfully deep as you always read the Pop Group's were.

The austere, imaginative Gang of Four were absurdly refreshing next to the stale Jam. Their records are amongst dozens eagerly anticipated during the coming months. The Jam are a damaging diversion.

The Clash

Music Machine

Like the few other rock bands that occasionally verge on genius — such as The Rolling Stones and the original Roxy Music — The Clash are notoriously unpredictable.

This is why I was unable to quibble with Ian Penman's damning review of their Harlesden Roxy gig (NME 4.11.78). Although I completely disagreed with certain of his conclusions, it was perhaps the worst Clash performance I'd ever seen.

But that was inevitable, considering the bad karma created by the organiser, the departing Bernie Rhodes.

However, this was a truly great Clash show at the Music Machine, and not because the karma of a Sid Vicious benefit peels merrily with a heartfelt joy and is therefore the antithesis of the Roxy event.

Aware that they rarely play at their best in the capital although regarded as a 'London band', they determinedly rammed a revealing passion into the concert. And there was a restless tension within the band which undoubtedly contributed to the power of their performance.

Long before the band hit the stage Joe Strummer was said to have been enraged that Mick Jones played guitar on the three numbers Philip Rambow performed, including one called, "A Song For Sid". With Rambow on acoustic guitar, Rich Kid bassist Glenn Matlock and The Slits' new drummer, Budgie, they showed impressive traces of Crazy Horse.

Strummer's fury presumably fermented during The Slits' set, and by the time The Clash opened superbly with "Safe European Home", the first track of "Give 'Em Enough Rope", it had transmogrified into Pure Energy; or else Joe was about to suffer an onstage coronary.

Most rock audiences are strangely reactionary about their heroes ramming new material down their throats, and it's a tribute to The Clash's fire power and strength that the mood established with "Home" was intensified during the next two songs: their splendid unrecorded interpretation of the Bobby Fuller Four's classic mid-60s rockabilly song, "I Fought The Law", and their own "Jail Guitar Doors".

Although Strummer has now discovered how to keep his voice healthy for a whole tour, the most striking aspect of his performance was the way he Method Acted every song, totally immersing himself in their individual atmospheres, particularly on "English Civil War" and "White Man In Hammersmith Palais". And his uneasy omnipresent sense of tragedy was counterpointed by his intense but successful struggle to retain dramatic control of every single syllable.

Apart from this the set comprised all the new album, plus a bunch of singles ("I Fought The Law" may be the next one), and closed with a handful of songs from their first LP.

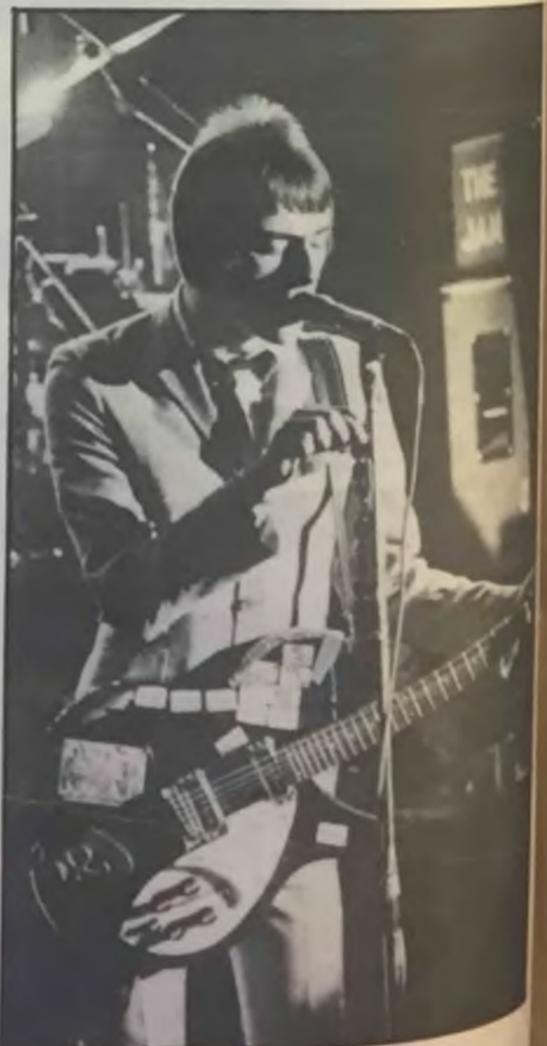

Other highlights were an excellent rendition of "Clash City Rockers", one of their most underrated classic hard-rock songs despite being a hybrid of "Garageland" and Lennon-McCartney's "You Can't Do That"; "Tommy Gun" featuring Jones' classic (almost) one note guitar solo, the stirring Hoople-like "Stay Free" with Jones on lead vocals as the number hurtled along at twice the speed of the

Requiem for El Sid

LP version; and a rock-solid "Capital Radio" with the rhythm section of drummer Topper Headon and bassist Paul Simonon harder than ever.

It was a pity that in the end the gig was marred by certain Music Machine bouncers trying to mash members of the audience.

Eddie & The Hot Rods

Electric Ballroom. If the Rods couldn't bring the house down, at least they can come close.

It was midway through "Take It Or Leave It" that the lights scaffolding collapsed, crashing down across the stage. Only by the merest of millimetres did nimble Barrie Masters and several close admirers avoid becoming mincemeat.

Happily, no broken bones; only light-bulbs. If the gig was memorable for anything apart from that particular incident then I've forgotten what.

Which isn't a put-down; Eddie and the Hot Rods are more than anything a band for the moment. Their appeal is precisely instantaneous, powerful while it lasts and, as the final chord dies, evaporates until the next time.

Liking their music should pose no problems for anybody, discounting obstacles of fashion and ideology. And, after it's all over, you don't go home to form discussion-groups.

That's probably the way they want it. Barrie Masters enjoys himself and doesn't care who knows it. He literally can't keep a straight face and, whatever he's got, it's infectious.

The band are more stolid fellows - Masters darting to, from and between them like a pinball - but play with no less attack for all that. Dave Higgs handles his guitar with all the rock'n'roll flash his name so singularly lacks; and likewise Graeme Douglas. The pair are especially effective on "The Kids Are Alright" and new song "Breathless".

Compliments for drummers and bassists tax the ingenuity something rotten so let's just say that Steve Nicol and Paul Gray hold their ends up in fine style.

When it comes to fresh, adrenalin-speed rhythm and blue pop, the Rods again showed that they do it better than most.

Yet there's something so ordinary about them (possibly their trousers?) that it's easily forgotten how crucial their energy was in smashing a hole through moribund pre-76 rock. That much achieved, it's doubtful whether they'll advance any further.

But they'll have a great time going nowhere.

There's this band The Members who everybody says are definitely going somewhere, and it's hard to disagree. Fronted (and front is the word) by one Nicky Tesco, they've stumbled through Punk to emerge with a clean, potent music that's to be sold to us as "The Sound Of The Suburbs".

It's a lovely, cutting noise and it can switch to non-comic reggae ("Stand Up And Spit") with a graceful ease that's their near unique. Instrumentally, it's Jean-Marie Carroll and Nigel Bennett (guitars) plus bass-player Chris Payne and drummer Adrian Lillywhite who take the credit.

But even more important is The Members' personality: embodied in Tesco and shining through every number. The trio of "Soho A-Go-Go", "Chelsea Nightclub" and "Police-Car" stand out, appealing and appalling.

The Members are ready for promotion. Tesco and co are corner shop now but one day they'll be high street. Catch them on special offer.

David Kubinec's Excess. Nashville. Kubie t-shirts adorn barmaids, bouncers, and roadies; Kubie album sleeves festoon the Nashville walls. Could A&M be plotting to unleash the biggest thing since Shirley Bassey on the universal rock mind?

Ninety Miles An Hour Down A Dead-end Street

The air hangs heavy with expectation; and heavier still with the adversely therapeutic music of the support act: The Steve Linton Band, who sport a Star Trek drumkit and trepan the audience with a sub-Sabbath set.

Enter the Excess, fronted by the excessive.

David Kubinec has recently been rescued from a decade of bubblegumming in Albania.

This Iggy clone defies logic. His onstage mannerisms are like an anxious tarantula's, and his stage act has to be encephalographed to be believed.

Kubie & Co have an outside chance of attaining stardom, if only on the outlandish ticket. It might have happened tonight had they not overlooked such minor details as a soundcheck or a rehearsal.

When switched into the same PA, the musicians seem to be playing in different bands, and they sound like an earthquake in a scrap metal yard.

Hope and Anchor

There was a commercial theory a while ago suggesting that for music to be instantly accessible a fair percentage of it had to be predictable. In other words, if you're going to forsake an identifiable format there'll be little chance of a sympathetic reaction. It's all lies. Essential Logic ambitiously disregard orthodox structure, harmony and instrumentals, but still play an invigorating, totally absorbing set, after a mere seven gigs. Their components are Rich Tea on skins, Mark on bass, guitarists Phil The Smurf and William Tell, with a frontline of Dave Flash, tenor sax, and the band's mentor Lora Logic on second sax and vocals. Logic consistently defy any Kubie's quasi-Bowie voice vies with his onstage abandon, but degenerates into frogfart outside his one and a half octaves.

Kubie's Excess should tighten up their act, unclutter their delivery, and the public will be theirs. Tonight their greatest talent is the skill of concealing it.

Oval Stage Show

Wimbledon F.C. So Oval breathes again, revived by some vigorous mouth-to-mouth from Messrs Gillett and Nelki. What hope for the patient this time? Read on...

Bill-toppers The Secret have songs and confidence, lack charm and coherence. "Take Me Home" was a great start, a churning chune offset by exhilarating pop guitar from Oily Robinson, the band's token Jewish Negro-Indian "with a bit of Stockwell thrown in". Eat your heart out, Phil Lynott.

Now for the bad news: the band has since split.

Better luck with the others, Charlie.

Harry George

Meanwhile little Micky Modern, beetle-browed and cricket-clad, came on like Russell Mael and Dudley Moore rolled into one. Sparks with a heart, indeed.

Strangely, that was the peak, though ex-Glitter Band drummer Pete Phipps gave a classy performance, and Benny Leopard (bass) and Billy Evans (keyboards) were fine when you could hear 'em.

Textural muddiness and a generally unfocused approach undercut deft little ditties like "What Is Wrong" and "Night After Night". Teething troubles, I guess; it was only their second gig. Even so, a dangerous smugness threatens to pollute their sense of fun. Otherwise, it's bright, brittle pop for all ages.

Shrink was an eye-ful for the most jaded Ziggy fan.

A small crimson clump remains of his hair, while head and neck were painted gold (in spite of Ian Fleming); and his ensemble was completed by a rust-coloured plastic jump-suit. The Virgin Soldiers, his band, wore fatigues.

Murderously efficient "Jean Genie" riffing from Shrink and his guitarist reinforced the Spiders From Mars resemblance. But this man carries disorientation beyond the visual; bursts of puerile sobbing were interspersed with Esperanto nonspeak. It was totally indecipherable.

"Valid Or Void" was written by The Secret (Shrink was once a member) and is perversely insistent enough to be a hit. A languid sequence recalling reflective Doors "Love Street", "The Spy" proved the Golden One could actually sing: a true all-round entertainer, this boy.

Just as the spectacle began to transcend novelty status, they stopped as if on cue and crept off.

A cunning subversion of the encore concept? No, a power cut.

The only act with no imminent prospect of vinyl immortality was arguably the best on the night. Let's hear it for Nicky Shy, once alongside Lene and Bobby Henry in Gillett's abortive Exiles venture.

Shy's combination of melody and grievance recalls Mr Costello; his short hair and staring eyes, a schoolboy Iggy. But a distinctive personality lurks just below the surface of the voice.

His band are an exemplary trio, a less lumbering Banashes with guitarist Rob Lamb unafraid to leave spaces. Dave Wickham's drums and Matthew Seligmann's surefooted bass explain this confidence, ensuring tension without frenzy.

There was at least one great song - the unabashed, flowing "Nameless Hearts" - and a cluster of memorable couplets.

Now for the bad news: the band has since split.

Better luck with the others, Charlie.

Harry George

Law of Logic

expectations by breaking most numbers into three separate sections, and stringing them together with Zappaesque one-liners on sax. As each section has an entirely distinctive rhythm and tempo, Lora had to stem the odd burst of applause by explaining the song hadn't actually finished. Over this slow and moody experimental base comes Lora's haywire vocal style. Comprising a series of squeaks, penetrating yells and operatic warbling, she covers a larger range of expression in one number than your average crooner can in an entire set. The overall tension she creates is also strengthened by her unusually sensitive lyrics. Though they're all worth a mention, the two numbers that hit hardest are "World Friction" and "Quality Crayon Wax Okay". Both feature waltzing reggae and funk backings under extended sax solos, and allow Lora great vocal freedom. Whether or not it's deliberate, they keep both guitars firmly in the rhythm section, when any solos would usefully counteract the saxes. Also they don't use vocal harmonies, which would otherwise give them a chance to fill out their sound. Right now they're an archetypal "underground" band with enormous talent and some unique material. And they shocked someone who recognised their one-time single "Aerosol Burns". "We're meant to be obscure!" cried Lora. Catch them now before they're not. Mark Ellen

TOUCH THAT DIAL!

AIWA AD-6350 stereo cassette deck

The best advice we can offer is to try a few top brands and experiment to see which is most compatible with your own deck. Some of the new generation of chrome setting tapes e.g. Maxell UDXL II and TDK SA are certainly worth investigating. Being a self-confessed reel-to-reel enthusiast, I approached this month's review models with considerable interest. The last time I had given some cassette decks a thorough work out the results were frankly disappointing. The three units submitted were of the popular front loading configuration whereby all controls are located on the front panel. Advantages over top loading, include ease of stacking with other components and readily visible meters. The first deck, from the famous Pioneer stable, is the CT-F500. This new model lines up at the bottom of the range under the phenomenally successful CT-F4040, with a typical selling price of about £100. The CT-F500 is certainly conventional in layout and has been clearly built to a price. There's nothing startling in the features, which include Dolby noise reduction and auto shut-off. However, it's on listening tests that its true virtues become readily apparent.

Utilizing recordings made on TDK and Maxell tape together with pre-recorded demo tapes, the sonic quality was pretty exceptional. There was a clarity, detail and sparkle about the music that was at all times impressive. Pioneer are to be congratulated on producing a unit capable of such high quality sound, particularly related to the modest selling price. Next under scrutiny is the KD-10 from JVC, with a typical selling price of £210. Apart from the usual Dolby system and auto-stop here you get two large highly visible meters, a timer facility for absent recordings and a row of LED peak level indicators. Apart from looking 'space age', these are very useful to warn of the onset of over-recording. The conventional VU meters fitted are fine for general level setting but are unable to react to short transient bursts in the same way that LED's are. Sound quality of the KD-10 was good but seemed to lack a little bit of the life found with the CT-F500. However, this effect was not marked and will certainly complement bright-sounding associated components. Bass extension was good and there was a lot of it.

All in all a good performance. With a few more sophistications and a price tag of about £145 we have the Aiwa AD-6350, which features a two-step LED peak indicator, a cue review mechanism for simple track selection, a timer facility and a fine bias adjustment for normal tapes. In operation the AD-6350 was very smooth and positive — as you would expect for the extra cost. With recordings made on the AD-6350 and our demo tapes, re-play quality was excellent, with an apparent effortless ease about the reproduction that was most appealing. In summary, I was pleasantly surprised by the results obtained with these three units. The Pioneer although offering only basic facilities, must be termed best value for money; the JVC will appeal by virtue of its LED peak indicators for a slightly larger outlay and the Aiwa for its standard of finish and overall reproduction. As a postscript I have always contended that a £70 disc source will eclipse any cassette deck whatever its price. Yet here we have three units at the bottom of their respective ranges which nearly achieve this. Such is progress.

STONES, DYLAN

Special disco, Jagger as lonesome monogamous lover Sammy Glick alone in his mansion waiting for the girls and booze to arrive so he can drink/screw/paaaaarty himself out of this depression as he wonders why he isn't happy anymore, boo-hoo, it's tough at the top, etcetera.

"Lies" is Ronnie Wood getting nostalgia for when he ran around The Faces' stage cranking out "good time" "raunch" while of Rodder's toasted the Tartan Hordes with paraffin. It's the infinite void itself, this "Lies".

Only on the album's last two tracks do the Stones quit working on being ever-evil with their same old broken toys and strike out for new ground. The last cut, "Shattered", is about dissipation is the way Jagger sings it: a clipped, sneering word-staccatto stream of Lou Reed folk-lore interspersed with Patti Smith babbling hysteria.

Does it work?

No, it stinks, it sounds like a bunch of power-poppers who just heard the first of Velvet Underground album.

However, the song before it, "Beast Of Burden" is in a different league to anything else on "Some Girls" or indeed anything the Stones have ever done. This doesn't use sexual deviation, black magic, white powders, name dropping and the panto-porn on the title track. It's like a breath of inner city air after crawling out of the sewer. Refreshing.

It's the blackest thing on the record, as well as the best, which is ironic considering that elsewhere Jagger displays an affection for his soul-brothers (and sisters) that makes George Wallace look like Martin Luther King (and don't feed me that "parody" bilge — that wasn't the Albertos at Altamont and it ain't The Baron Knights on "Some Girls") — as well as some r-e-s-p-e-c-t for his partner, telling her he'll never be her Beast Of Burden, but he doesn't want her to be his Beast Of Burden either . . .

"All I want is for you to make love to me . . ."

It's a bloozy "Knock On Wood", the only cut on the album where the Stones' musical muscles don't sag from lack of use, taut funk and controlled passion . . . Jagger even sounds like a soul singer.

"Am I hard enough?/Am I rough enough?/Am I rich enough?/I'm not . . . too blind to see".

A beautiful song but a £5 album that would have made a good one-sided single is not exactly bargain basement.

It's too late for the Stones to change now. Showbiz troupers have all got their tried, trusted and tired catchphrases, from Dick Emery to Mick Jagger. Dick's not going to stop saying "Ooooh, you are awful, but I like you!" and Mick's never going to stop dabbling with his pet subject matters of white powders, whips, scarlet women, Whitehouse voyeurism, etc.

Move with the times, Mick, keep your party pieces up to date and you haven't got anything to worry about. You'll be doing this in 1989 for sure.

Okay, you went over the top on "Some Girls" but I guess Punk had you even more scared than you thought, huh?

"Beethoven wrote whole fucking symphonies in one key, what does it fucking matter!" asks Mick.

What about you, Bob? "Bob Dylan was always here," he says. "When I was a child there was Bob Dylan. And before I was born, there was Bob Dylan."

That's the trouble with these song and dance men who have had their day but won't admit it. They get above themselves. Still, as long as the people who pay their wages are happy.

And you are happy? Aren't you?

happier indications of the man's style.

ROYAL RASSES: Unconventional People (Warrior 12")

A message to the ungodly: "I don't think I'm really gonna give my rights away. I've got my life to live, I'm gonna live it in my own way. When Jah gave me my life he gave me also my hands to fight — you unconventional people, whoever you are."

Superb discomix from this sparsely-recorded group. Great lyric, tight danceworthy rhythm, and inspired vocals from the very magnificent Prince Lincoln. Readers familiar with the Rasses previous classics — "Love The Way It Should Be" and "Kingston 11" — might reasonably anticipate a performance equal to this exalted pair, and "Unconventional People" most decidedly fits the bill. Search out Prince Lincoln's solo Studio One "True Experience" for further complement.

HORACE FAITH: Looking (Anansi 12")

rock-oriented, horn laden waxing, composed jointly with Jacqui Simms, and benefitting from the engineering expertise of both Delroy Washington and Mike Dan (Nee Dorane).

"Looking" is ideal disco music, bearing some similarities with the work of Spartacus R, and very nearly pop in its arrangement. The tune doesn't exactly drop bass, but it's eminently musical for a' that.

ALTON ELLIS: It's Hard To Be A Lover/Love Like Mine (Grove Music 12")

ALTON ELLIS: Rhodesia/Red Sea (Joint)

One of the true greats in Jamaican music, songster supreme Alton Ellis has lacked direction in the past few years — even though he has seen his music go on to score massively in the hands of lesser artistes. The Grove Music titles are lush and lavishly-produced pieces, aimed squarely at the Tim Chandell/lovers-rock audience, with subtle arrangements courtesy of Jackie Mittoo. Especially noteworthy is the flute employed on the topside, not to mention Alton's faultless vocal. "Love Like Mine", however, is my favourite of the pair. Beautiful being the operative description.

Keith Hudson produced "Rhodesia", and the song utilises the Man from Shooter's Hill's "I'm Not Satisfied" rhythm from his "Rasta Communication" LP. Alton pleads "one for all and all for one" in a country torn by racial strife and doomed imperialism.

FAMILY CHOICE: Use To Be My Girl (Union)

The voices of Bill Campbell and Ginger Williams — if I'm not mistaken — join forces on a driving, but unremarkable version of the Gamble/Huff composition. Horn-driven dub remarks a more satisfactory effect.
