60 STATIONS WITH ONE TUNING KNOB!

EASY TO BUILD

SIMPLE TO OPERATE

AMAZINGLY SELECTIVE

SUPERFINE QUALITY

COSTS UNDER £10 TO BUILD including valves

Submitted to stringent tests, the "Easytune 60" has received the approval of radio's most severe critics. It solves the difficult one-knob super-het problem over which the best brains of the industry have for months been puzzling. It is, in fact, the finest and simplest one-knob super-het receiver yet produced.

Full details of the "Easytune 60" are given in the May issue of the "Wireless Magazine" now on sale. Do not fail to get your copy TO-DAY.

The Blessing of a Substitute

ONE after another, the old opponents of broadcasting have had to admit that it is not so black as they tried to paint it. Sir Thomas Beecham, in the flush of his recent successes in New York, has so far modified his former severity as to call wireless "a blessed substitute"—though still only a substitute—for "the thrill of hearing the original in the concert-hall." As deputy for Toscanini, who is on the sick list, Sir Thomas has conducted a season of the New York Philharmonic Concerts, and several of them have been broadcast. He has scored one triumph after another, and would have prolonged his stay in the States had not the forthcoming Opera Season at Covent Garden demanded his presence in London. It was just before leaving America that he gave the above-quoted view of wireless in a signed article in one of the leading New York papers, and his many admirers there and at home—particularly those who know him only by wireless—are sure to welcome such a pronouncement from him. Sir Thomas is careful to explain that music which "is required to run the whole gamut of knobs" must remain "a flatland of interpretation"; he thinks that "broadcasting, even the best of it to-day, is yet not nearly good enough," and fears that "perfection of tonal reproduction is likely to remain for ever the dream of scientists."

"Each instrument of an orchestra," he points out, "when any great composition is being played, speaks in complete harmony with the ideas of the composer. With orchestras of 100 instruments on the platform, frequently the entire 100 instrumental voices are speaking together. Whatever the number of microphones used to catch the tones of an orchestra for broadcasting purposes, we must not lose sight of the fact that in thousands of cases only one loud-speaker must vibrate in an almost infinite number of ways to recreate the tones for the listener. This is quite impossible.

"It is as preposterous to expect one man, possessed of only one tongue, to correctly interpret and reproduce the sound of 100 voices singing together. Radio, like the man of but one tongue, cannot possibly create the sound of the orchestral choir."

Sir Thomas does, nevertheless, pay handsome tribute to the remarkable scientific progress which radio transmission has already made, and concludes his article by urging all who cannot attend concerts to regard their receiving sets as a comfort and a solace. "Even the substitute," he adds, "is a blessing, and for that let us be grateful."

SUNDAY, April 24, when the elections for the Prussian Diet take place in Germany, is likely, I am told, to provide listeners with the longest late dance programme that country has ever transmitted. The Berlin Funk Orchestra begins with a concert at 7 o'clock, at which Mauritz van den Berg will be the solo violinist, and Adelheid Armhold and Ludwig Hofmann will sing. After the general news, at 10 o'clock, the Gebrüder Steiner dance band will play at intervals until dawn. These particular elections, my informer states, are of momentous issue to Germany, as they determine whether or not the Socialist majority, which has hitherto governed Prussia, will be forced to make way for the Fascist, Adolf Hitler. Figures, as they come in, will be compared by the announcer with that of the Presidential Election a fortnight ago. As there are nineteen parties which will have to be mentioned—no matter how poor the chances of thirteen of them are—the night will be far advanced before Germany retires to rest. According to April statistics, Germany now has 4,168,440 citizens holding wireless licences, the greater proportion of whom will be listening on Sunday night, as well as many Austrians who, more than the rest of Europe, are politically affected by all that occurs within the borders of Germany. Prussia is the "key" state within the German republican federation, and dictates the national policy.

Walpurgis Night

MANY readers may have listened, in past years, to Norag's relays of the Walpurgis Night Festival from the Harz Mountains. Once again this transmission is announced—for SATURDAY, April 30—and, in view of this being Goethe year, I have no doubt that the approaching festival will be made more than usually interesting. According to the legend—which Goethe has immortalised in his Faust—on the eve of May Day the witches hold high revel on the Brocken—the summit of the Harz Mountains, where, until cock-crow, diabolical scenes are enacted. Little of the full flavour of such scenes should be lost in the hands of the modern broadcasting producer, with his armoury of appropriate "noises." Goethe, who was a notable lover of nature in general, and of mountain scenery in particular, has portrayed in a wonderful manner the atmosphere of magic and of the romantic in his descriptions:—

"Uhu! Schuhu! tönt es näher,
Kauz und Kiebitz und der Häher,
Sind sie alle wach geblieben?
Sind das Molche durchs Gesträuche?
Lange Beine, dicke Bäuche!"

To have travelled through these regions is to understand how the poet—a Pantheist—visualised this ancient legend, which, according to some, dates back to pagan times.

Operas for Next Week

HAYDN is less generally known as an opera composer, yet he has written several very charming works which have stood the test of time. During next week listeners will have an opportunity of hearing his best-known opera buffa, The Apothecary, twice—i.e., on SUNDAY and THURSDAY from Prague and Stuttgart-Frankfurt respectively. On Thursday evening another Haydn opera, Orlando Paladino (or "Ritter Roland," as it is mostly called in Germany) is to be broadcast from Leipzig and relayed by Königs Wusterhausen. An interesting operatic broadcast, which will also be relayed by the Swiss stations, is announced from Vienna for THURSDAY next. That station is then to relay from the Opera House one of Verdi's earliest operas, I masnadieri (The Robbers), based on Schiller's Die Räuber.

Broadcast Libel

ABOUT a year ago, World-Radio published details of a Canadian Bill, called the Civil Responsibility Radio Broadcasting Bill, then being drafted, which sought to make the owners of a broadcasting station liable for slander committed by any person broadcasting from their station. I now learn that the New York Legislature has before it a measure designed to place broadcasters under the same responsibility for libel as newspapers. The Bill, now before the Codes Committees in Senate and Assembly, will probably be given a public hearing. Similarly to the section covering editors and publishers, the measure provides that "every person, firm, or corporation owning, controlling, or operating a radio station broadcasting programmes to the public is chargeable with the broadcast by radio of any matter broadcast to the public from such broadcasting station." Immunity for broadcasting a true report of public official proceedings would be granted, and a broadcasting station also would be protected against persons delivering false statements intended for broadcast. These persons would be liable to prosecution for a misdemeanour, as also would those who threaten to broadcast a libel or who accept money to prevent the broadcasting of a libel.

A Right of Reply

IN France any person "attacked" in any way in a newspaper has a "right of reply," and for the purposes of such reply, may insist upon being accorded equal space and equal prominence to that occupied by the "attack." Some little time back powers were sought to extend the "right of reply" to broadcasting, but, although legislation does not, so far, control this facility in connexion with broadcasting, nevertheless, in a recent instance (details of which were given in last week's World-Radio) the director of a French broadcasting station permitted a playwright, who had objected to broadcast criticisms of his play, to read before the microphone a review, in praise of his work, which had appeared in a newspaper.

Music from Other Lands

XI—France

By G. JEAN-AUBRY

ALTHOUGH, in former times, French music enjoyed periods of great activity, both as regards the polyphonic style of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, as well as the richly varied harpsichord school which flourished during the reigns of Louis XIV and Louis XV, from the middle of the eighteenth century to the middle of the nineteenth, the music of France, whether symphonic, vocal, or instrumental, cannot be said to have possessed an individual character of its own. With the exception of Berlioz—the unique genius of his time—French musical activities, down to 1860, were almost entirely directed towards the theatre, to the feeble imitation and debasement of the distinctive charm with which a Dalayrac or an Insigny endowed opéra-comique, or to the zealous emulation of the lesser virtues of grand opera, as exhibited by Rossini and Meyerbeer. It is all the more surprising, therefore, that, during the second half of last century, a definite school of composition should suddenly have arisen, essentially French in style and abounding in variety. Though it is always risky to hold political events responsible for shaping the history of art, it must be admitted that the moral shock caused by the disastrous war of 1870 deeply influenced the minds of all young French musicians. The younger generation conceived a higher and more noble ideal of musical art, no longer delighting in the solitary successes of the theatre. They endeavoured to find national expression in music, and, to that end, studied the most admirable examples of classic German and Italian art, and the neglected masterpieces of their own. This formed a solid foundation; and upon it they constructed musical works which, though differing in aim and method, still contained, in a greater or lesser degree, the essential qualities of French temperament and feeling.

Almost simultaneously appeared the careful, talented, if somewhat academic, works of Saint-Saëns; the sincere, lyrical compositions of César Franck, and the tender, delicate, and emotional writing of Gabriel Fauré. These are the three starting-points of modern French music, to which must be added the strong and arresting personality of Emmanuel Chabrier.

These various composers, together with their successors, shared one common characteristic; they sought inspiration in architecture and painting, rather than in philosophy and literature. All the best French works of our day are imbued with the same desire for harmonious proportion, the same delight in the economy of means, and the exploiting of instruments to the full. At the same time these works exhibit a like partiality for earthly phenomena, the same fascination for competing with the colour and form of things. In this respect no one has equalled Claude Debussy who, with the daring of tradition, succeeded in re-shaping the very essence of music, rendered it more pliable, capable of finer shades of expression; and, in so doing, greatly influenced not only modern French music, but the whole contemporary music of the world.

In France to-day there are undoubtedly four living masters. M. Paul Dukas, whose Apprenti-Sorcier long ago made him famous; M. Maurice Ravel, whose every work displays ingenuity of writing and certainty of touch, and who has bestowed upon all the manifold forms of the dance—waltz, bolero, pavane, minuet, sarabande, etc.—some new colour and unexpected grace; M. Albert Roussel, the composer, amongst other things, of Evocations and the Suite pour orchestre, witness of musicianship obsessed with the flamboyancy of the East coupled with a turn for truly Western rhythm; M. Florent Schmitt, who combines harmonic refinement with a forceful expression akin to violence, as shown to greatest advantage in Psalm XLVI and the Tragedy of Salome.

Following on these composers, all of whom to-day are over fifty years of age, a new generation has sprung up, of whom it is difficult to give a general outline. The outstanding figure amongst them would seem to be M. Jacques Ibert who, with his stage works, Angélique and Le Roi d'Yvetot, as well as Les Rencontres and Escale, intended for the concert-room, has proved himself the possessor of a delicate and natural musical talent, informed with the pure joy of life. Coupled with him, the two strongest personalities in present-day French music are indisputably M. Francis Poulenc and M. Arthur Honegger, who between them form the most complete contrast possible. M. Poulenc's unforced inspiration has rediscovered French popular song, which he imitates with ease, in all its simplicity, light-heartedness and malice. Nothing could be more fresh, younger in spirit and more essentially French than the music of M. Poulenc.

Maurice Ravel

If his style is occasionally somewhat careless, his distinctive melody and facile charm are virtues not commonly found in this age of complicated music. On the other hand, Arthur Honegger combines French and Germanic tendencies which results in austere works of impetuosity and passion, such as Judith, Horace Victorieux or Pacific, and more simple productions, tender and moving, such as Pastorale d'Été, the Chant de Joie and Amphion. The personality of M. Honegger is a complex of various elements and forms a figure of the highest interest in modern music.

For prolific output and ease of production, as well as inequality in musical value, there is no one to-day who surpasses M. Darius Milhaud. His most successful efforts would seem to be those which reveal his deep sympathy for the Jewish race; or those such as Les Choéphores, in which he indulges in a tragic violence which, though inspired by subjects taken from Greek drama, might equally well fit the wildest pages of the Bible. M. Georges Auric, for some time an awkward admirer of the vigour of Chabrier, has now devoted himself almost exclusively to writing music for the films, and has not fulfilled general expectations. It is to be hoped that his forthcoming Symphony will come up to the standard he set himself in the ballets Les Fâcheux and Matelots.

Mlle Germaine Tailleferre and M. Louis Durey, two young composers of great promise, relapsed into silence some years ago—not definitely, it is to be hoped. Amongst newcomers must be mentioned M. Marcel Delannoy, who came into prominence by a little opera entitled Le Fou de la Dame and a Quartet, performed last year at the International Music Festival at Oxford, and revealed a rich and well-balanced style. Jean Cartan, still quite a young man, is the author of a Duet for Flute and Clarinet which reveals the touch of a born musician, and an artist already master of instrumental possibilities.

In view of the extraordinary promise shown at the start of the present century, French music now seems to have gone somewhat astray. Tendencies, dimly visible, the revival of opéra-comique, for instance, seem to have faded away. This is regrettable. Everything points to the fact that grand opera, as it existed from Rossini to Wagner, has had its day; but it remains to be proved that a theatrical art, more lyrical in form, less pretentious and in lighter vein, is neither possible nor to be desired. Handled by honest and intelligent musicians, opéra-comique or the "comédie musicale," might easily return to favour, and by virtue of feeling and tradition, the younger school of French composers would be more likely to succeed in this undertaking than any other. So far we have been disappointed, and the example set by M. Jacques Ibert in his Angélique still remains to be followed. But the crisis through which the great lyrical stages of the world are passing at the present time seems to indicate some such combination of music and drama, though as yet it is barely discernible.

In the realm of chamber music no first-class works have appeared in France during the last few years, with the exception of those I have mentioned; whilst, as regards symphonic music, the boldest, most original and more lasting work has come from men getting on for sixty—such as M. Ravel's Concerto and his Boléro, or the Troisième Symphonie by M. Albert Roussel, rather than from the younger generation. This is a situation which does not apply to music alone; in the field of literature, fatal facility and undue haste in post-war artistic production is equally reflected. But there can

Ernest Ansermet

BORN at Vevey, on the shore of the Lake of Geneva, one of the most beautiful spots in Europe, Ernest Ansermet spent his boyhood, and had his early training, in his native Switzerland. As a student at Lausanne University, and afterwards at Paris, he distinguished himself in mathematics, and while yet a very young man for such a task, returned to his original Alma Mater as professor of that intriguing subject. It may well be that his thorough familiarity with so exact, and withal exacting, a science, accounts largely for the clarity with which he can interpret the most complex modern scores. But an enthusiastic interest in music went hand in hand with his other studies, and that, too, he cultivated with the thoroughness which is characteristic of him. And, having once decided that music, and not mathematics, was to be his life-work, he enrolled as a pupil with two of the greatest living masters of conducting—the branch of music he was to make his own; Nikisch and Weingartner were both proud to count him a disciple. He studied composition, also, with Ernest Bloch. In 1914, at the age of thirty-one, he was appointed Conductor of the Casino Concerts at Montreux, succeeding Francesco de Lacerda, who had been one of his first teachers: a year later he followed Stavenhagen as Conductor at Geneva. It was then that he entered on the association with the late Serge Diaghilev, in the course of which he covered a wide part of the habitable globe—North and South America, as well as most of Europe. He was responsible for the musical side of many of the ballets of the famous Corps, including the first productions of such notable works as Stravinsky's Pulcinella, Chant du Rossignol, Renard, Les Noces, Satie's Parade, and Falla's Tricorne, and in that way earned the reputation of being one of the ablest and most sympathetic exponents of present-day music. But, though he could easily claim to have done more than any other conductor in furthering the cause of the young composer, he is no less sincerely in sympathy with the great classical masters: his conducting of the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, which he founded in 1918, of the Orquesta Filarmonica of Buenos Aires, and the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris, of which he was appointed first conductor on its establishment in 1928, has made that abundantly clear. None of his official posts, however, keeps him so close a prisoner that he cannot make pretty frequent journeys abroad, and most of the world's great orchestras have welcomed him as guest-conductor. He is one of those whom players not only respect whole-heartedly as a master of his job—and nowadays, when the standard of orchestral playing is everywhere so high, no conductor who knows less than the whole of his task need ever hope to escape being found out—but whom they like and admire for his uniformly courteous and thoughtful treatment of them. Audiences everywhere, too, are in his debt for the new light he has often thrown on the dark places in many a modern score, and for the sane clarity of his readings of the classics. He has impressed many a country, moreover, by his intimate knowledge of its own most recent doings. There was one occasion in England, for instance, when no native conductor was available to take charge of a programme of modern English music. M. Ansermet came over from Paris, at very short notice, and presented all the music in a way which earned him the sincere thanks of every one of the composers.

[Our picture is reproduced from a pencil drawing by Madame Charles Wiener of Brussels, whose nimble hand has thus crystallised strikingly characteristic moments in the conducting or playing or singing of many great artists. Her drawings are usually made during rehearsals or concerts, with no suggestion that her originals were posing for them, and in almost every case they have signed their portraits, in token of their admiration for them. We hope to present further examples of Madame Wiener's art in future issues.]

Coincidences in Listening

To the Editor of WORLD-RADIO

SIR,—On my receiver, Toulouse is at 77 degrees, and on the long waves, Eiffel Tower is at the same figure. Listening to Toulouse at 10 p.m. on 6th inst., I heard M. Tardieu making an election speech, and I switched over to the long waves without premeditation, and heard the same speaker.

I continued to switch backwards and forwards and listened to the speech alternately on 385 m. and 1,445 m. without touching the tuning dial, which was a curious experience, due to the same tuning being correct for two stations on different wave-bands, and the same speech being relayed on both transmissions.

Yours faithfully,

F. FROOM, Lt.-Col.

Lobswood, Fleet, Hants, April 7.

[Such coincidences are not uncommon. Possibly other readers have interesting experiences of a similar nature.—Ed.]

U.S.A.—Switzerland Transmission

To the Editor of WORLD-RADIO

SIR,—I am wondering if any of your many readers picked up the international short-wave transmission by the NBC of America to Landessender in Switzerland on Sunday night (April 10) at 7.15 p.m., and, if so, whether they noticed the beautiful clarity of the reception from the retransmission by the Swiss Station.

This is rather a remarkable feat, considering its having been picked up from a short-wave transmission. I presume it is not always so successful.

I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

H. H. DAWSON.

Grimsby, Lincs, April 11.

MUSIC FROM OTHER LANDS

be no doubt that the strenuous times we are undergoing at present, whilst restricting output, will inspire the coming generation to new thought and a more personally honest outlook; thus maintaining the magnificent revival which, since the beginning of this present century, after many years of silence, restored France to the front rank of musical nations.

Wireless on Russian Railways

The Soviet Press comments on the great success of the introduction of wireless receivers in the trains between Moscow and Leningrad. Within the past few weeks loud-speakers have been installed, by which travellers are kept informed of the names of the stations en route, and the time which will be spent at each. News, musical performances, and propaganda are also transmitted. It is understood that other train services are to be similarly fitted in the near future.

Australian Government Broadcasting Bill Withdrawn

(From our Australian Correspondent)

Although opinion in Australia is now practically unanimous in favour of the National broadcasting service being controlled by the Government, such a storm of protest broke out when the Government introduced the Australian Broadcasting Commission Bill that the bill was withdrawn during the second reading stage.

The trouble started when the printed bill, differing from all the forecasts, was circulated among members and in broadcasting and trade circles. It was found that clause 5 read:—

"For the purpose of the Act there shall be a Commission charged with the general administration of this Act, subject to such directions (if any) as are from time to time given by the Minister."

This, of course, gave the Postmaster-General complete power, although the present Government was elected on a policy of restricting Government enterprises. The present Postmaster-General (Mr. Fenton) is a recent convert from the Labour Party. However, the director of postal services, who is the executive head of the post office, issued a statement to the Press saying that the clause had crept into the bill by some unfortunate mistake and that it was never intended and would be withdrawn. But it has been pointed out that the clause is worded exactly as in a previous Bill drafted during the Labour Party's term of office but never presented to Parliament.

The Bill provided that the Commission should consist of five persons (one was intended to be a woman), the chairman to be paid £500 a year, the deputy chairman £400, and the others £300 each. On such small salaries, opponents of the Bill declared, the only type of Commissioners obtainable would be either wealthy men who would be occupied with other interests, or third-rate persons. Thus actual control would remain with the Post Office. The Commission was to be given power to engage in any business pertaining to wireless. This was read by the newspapers to mean the publication of wireless or even general newspapers in opposition to existing publications. Hence a further series of protests. By the wireless trade it was understood to foreshadow the likelihood of the postal workshops engaging in the manufacture of radio receivers to be sold in competition with those of private manufacturers.

The Bill empowered the Government to compel the Commission to broadcast any propaganda throughout the national chain. This clause aroused some trepidation, but was generally regarded as necessary in the public interest.

Although the Bill provided that "the Commission shall not broadcast advertisements in general," the next clause provided for "sponsored programmes accompanied by acknowledgments to the persons by whom they were made available." This aroused the resentment of the B class (privately owned) stations, which live by advertising and sponsored programmes and receive nothing from listeners' licence fees. The B stations are calling upon listeners to send telegrams of protest to their parliamentary representatives.

The Bill authorised the establishment of news agencies in any part of the world, and would exempt the Commission from all taxation. It retained in the Post Office control of the technical side of broadcasting.

After the Bill was explained in the House by the Postmaster-General and supported by the late Postmaster-General, the debate was adjourned to permit of meetings of the Government Party to deal with the objections raised. The opposition was led by Mr. W. M. Hughes (formerly Prime Minister) who denounced the Bill as pure socialism, and by Mr. F. H. Stewart, the proprietor of a B class station. Almost the entire Government party, it transpired, was opposed to the Bill, which apparently had been seen by no one except the Postmaster-General and his advisers in the Postal Department.

It was finally decided to withdraw the Bill. This means that it cannot come up again till next session—in a month's time.

U.S.A.-British Programme Interchange

(From our Washington Correspondent)

The interesting series of trans-Atlantic broadcasts, which has just been arranged between the Columbia Broadcasting System and the British Broadcasting Corporation, is worth comment as being something "different" in international exchange broadcasts. Hitherto, most foreign programmes have been in the nature of addresses by eminent people on a current topic, concerts by leading symphony orchestras, dance music, with an occasional sketch. They have all lacked the background of local colour, and distinctive national life. They have conveyed little or no idea of how the rest of the world lives.

The series just begun is intended to supply this human touch. The American programmes to England will attempt to show certain aspects of every-day American life, and the return broadcast from England will develop the same theme from English life. Four main headings have been chosen, under each of which the two broadcasting systems will build one programme. They are as follows:—

"The Eternal Schoolboy," two programmes, one English and one American, showing school life in each country:

"The Common Heritage," and "New England." The English programme will consist of Elizabethan music by Purcell and other composers, while the American broadcast will consist of a dramatised version of Longfellow's Miles Standish.

In "The Great Unlicked," America will tell England something of its universities and college life among the students, and an English broadcast dealing with the same subject will be received over here a fortnight later.

Vaudeville and musical comedy will be typified by two programmes entitled "Leicester Square" and "Broadway."

The first American broadcast from the Columbia studios was on April 14, and the English reply programme will be heard on Friday, April 22.

In pointing out that these programmes are intended to dig deeper into the work-a-day lives of the two great English-speaking peoples than has hitherto been the case in trans-Atlantic broadcasts, Mr. William S. Paley, President of the Columbia Broadcasting System, said: "The ties between Great Britain and the people of North America are particularly close, and the fact that in the British Isles, the United States, and Canada there are more than 175,000,000 people speaking the same language, makes it possible to build programmes for exchange that will convey ideas in words, as well as music."

CANADA

Licence Period Extended

(From Our Montreal Correspondent)

Following a debate in Parliament, during which considerable opposition was expressed to the increase in the radio receiving licence fee from 4s. 2d. (at par) to 8s. 4d. per annum, it is announced that owners of receiving sets will be given until June 1 to obtain their new licences, which were supposed to be taken out not later than April 1.

ARGENTINA

New Station for Buenos Aires

A new broadcasting station, to be constructed by Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Company at Chelmsford, for Buenos Aires, will incorporate all the latest developments in the design of broadcasting transmitters, including crystal and valve frequency control and low-power modulation. It will operate on a power of 20 kW., and will serve a large area round Buenos Aires. It is to be operated by Radio Excelsior of Buenos Aires, and regular transmissions are expected to begin early next year.

AUSTRIA

Erection of New Vienna Station

(From our Vienna Correspondent)

The work of construction has already begun on the new Vienna station on the Bisamberg hill, which is on the opposite side of the Danube from the Leopoldsdorf and Kahlenberg overlooking Vienna. The station will have a power of 100 kW., and will therefore be among the most powerful in Europe. Erection upon the site on the bleak Bisamberg could not be started until winter gave way to more favourable conditions. The masts will be of composite construction—of steel and timber. The total cost of the station is estimated at about forty thousand pounds, labour representing nearly one-half of this sum. A German firm has the contract, but Austrian labour must be employed wherever possible.

GERMANY

Increased Licence Figure:

The number of licensed listeners in Germany has now passed the 4,000,000 mark, being 4,168,440 on April 1 last. This figure included 356,837 unemployed, blind persons, and war-disabled, etc., who do not pay licence fees. The current quarter shows an increase of 114,711 paid and 72,877 free licences as compared with the respective figures for January 1. Of the four million listeners, more than one million are provided for by the Funk-Stunde, Berlin.

IRISH FREE STATE

Broadcasting and the Eucharistic Congress

(From a Correspondent)

The work of erecting and equipping the new Irish Free State high-power broadcasting station at Athlone is to be speeded up. Although the contracts had specified six months for the work, the International Eucharistic Congress, to be held in Dublin in June next, is regarded of so great an importance that the completion of the new broadcasting station within the next three months is to be hastened. In undertakings of this magnitude there is always the possibility of an unforeseen and unforeseeable hitch, but the Irish Free State Minister of Posts and Telegraphs is satisfied that this likelihood is remote. The regular broadcasting of the Dublin programme will not be entered upon until the autumn, as a good deal of finishing-off work will have to be done at leisure when the immediate urgency for completion no longer exists. The importance of the Dublin Eucharistic Congress may be gathered from the fact that it will be attended by 11 Cardinals, 33 Archbishops, 107 Bishops, 8 Assistant Bishops, 15 Vicars Apostolic, and 16 Abbots, together with deputies from every Roman Catholic order in the world.

Broadcasting House

3.—Electrical Plant and Power Supply

THE nature of the work at Broadcasting House complicates the question of power supply, wiring, and installation of plant. The necessity for securing continuity of power supply in all circumstances, the prevention of electrical and acoustical interference by electrical machinery, and the complete electrical isolation of broadcasting circuits were the three major points which required special consideration.

To fulfil the first of these requirements, it was necessary to guard against the failure of local mains, and arrangements were made with the St. Marylebone Borough Electricity Dept., to feed Broadcasting House from both their high-tension and low-tension supply networks. In addition to these precautions, other sources of power supply have been provided. It is not necessary to emphasise the fact that if lighting failed in the studios or control room, serious dislocation to the broadcasting service would inevitably occur. For this reason, a scheme of emergency supply has been adopted. This incorporates two sources of power, the first consisting of a lead storage-battery of 240 volts, 1,000 ampere-hour capacity, and the second a 100 kW, 3-phase, 50-cycle Diesel generating set. At first sight, it would appear that one of these plants might have been omitted, but consideration of the problem will show that the two are complementary.

It will be realised that in the event of a complete failure of supply from outside sources, some time would elapse before the emergency plant could be started and the lighting restored. It is to cover this period that the emergency battery has been provided. The battery feeds a system of secondary lighting points which have been installed in studios, control room, corridors and staircases. These points, which are permanently switched on during the hours of darkness in addition to the regular lighting, are designed to give sufficient illumination to enable people to move about the building without difficulty. Thus, the building cannot be put into complete darkness by a mains failure.

As a further precaution against the interruption of work in studios during the short period which it will take to start the emergency plant, change-over switches have been provided to connect the studio main lighting circuits to the battery. Thus a full lighting service can be restored at all important points, the only delay being the time necessary to operate the change-over switches. If the breakdown should be of long duration, then the emergency generating set would be started and the supply restored to lighting services, and the essential portions of the ventilating plant.

The emergency set has not sufficient output to supply the lighting of administrative offices and the whole of the air conditioning plant, but it is sufficient to give an adequate supply for the essential services of broadcasting which could be run indefinitely on a full basis without outside sources of electrical energy.

The St. Marylebone supply mains enter the switch room, which is situated in the sub-basement, three floors below ground level. This room is divided into four fire-proof sections, containing respectively the supply switchgear and transformers, the main distribution switch-gear, the emergency battery switchboard, and the emergency generating set and battery-charging motor-generator.

The outer wall of the switch room is actually under the pavement, and the presence of steel stanchions make it difficult to arrange a satisfactory layout of the plant. The layout achieved, although far from ideal, has the virtue of being compact and consistent. Since the switch room is three storeys below street level a section of the pavement above has been made removable. This covers a hatchway, eight feet square through which all the plant to be described was lowered.

Main Transformers and Switchgear

The St. Marylebone Electricity Dept. have run into the building three 6,600-volt, 3-phase feeders, one of which is connected directly to their generating station. There are in addition three 415-volt, 3-phase feeders. The high-tension and low-tension feeders are connected in parallel through circuit breakers to their respective busbars, which are coupled by three single-phase transformers, each rated at 500 K.V.A. The high-tension switchgear, transformers and low-tension switchgear are situated in separate fireproof cubicles ranged round the outer wall of the switch room, ventilation for these cubicles being provided from the main ventilating system.

This system of feeders ensures that Broadcasting House is almost immune from power supply failure. Provided the generating station is unaffected it is possible to feed the building by the direct high-tension feeder and to isolate the remaining high-tension and low-tension feeders by tripping the appropriate circuit breakers. The switchgear controlling the incoming high-tension mains consists of four circuit breakers and associated equipment. The circuit breakers are of the oil immersed, round-tank type, and are designed for a rupturing capacity of 250,000 K.V.A.

The metal-clad units are fully interlocked, and thus provide complete protection for human life and reduce to a minimum the possibility of error in operation. The protective equipment on the units comprises translay protection on two feeders, against both phase and earth faults, pilotless directional protection on the third feeder, and the usual overload and protective gear on the transformer.

The three single-phase 11,000/415-volts, 500 K.V.A. transformers are of the air-cooled type. The three incoming low-tension feeders are protected by an air-break circuit breaker in each phase. The whole of the sub-station equipment is the property of the St. Marylebone Corporation Electricity Department, and was installed under the supervision of their engineers.

From the low-tension busbars on the St. Marylebone's switchboard, four fibre-insulated cables, of two square inch section for the phases and one square inch for the neutral, are connected to the B.B.C.'s main intake switchgear, consisting of a 1,500 ampère, 3-phase oil circuit-breaker and isolator switch mounted in a steel cubicle. The circuit breaker is provided with the usual overload and no-volt trips. The isolating switch and breaker are mechanically interlocked, and the door cannot be opened unless the isolator is opened. Three ammeters, a power-factor meter, and a swinging bracket type voltmeter are mounted on the cubicle.

Feeder Switchgear

The switchgear controlling the feeders to the various services in the building is divided into five sections, namely, studio lighting, general lighting (offices, etc.), heating, power, and secondary lighting and battery control. The first four sections are grouped together in one compartment with the main intake circuit breaker, while the secondary lighting and battery control switchgear is placed in a separate fire-proof cubicle which is provided with separate access to the main corridor. This switchgear is of the totally enclosed, fully interlocked, oil immersed type, each individual circuit breaker being provided with overload and earth breakage protection. The oil circuit breakers are of the vertical draw-out pattern, permitting the adjustment and repair of any circuit breaker mechanism without making dead the main busbars.

The first section of the switchboard controls the feeders to the studio-lighting circuits, which have been sub-divided in such a manner that a fault on one group of studios will not affect others. Six feeders have been used, each feeder being controlled by a 100-ampère, single-phase circuit breaker. The feeders are arranged as follows:—

(1) Studio No. 1; (2) Studios in sub-basement and third floor; (3) Studios on sixth and seventh floors; (4) Studio BA; (5) Studio 3A; (6) Studio 8A.

Change-over switches are provided on these feeders to enable the attendant to connect them to the main alternating current supply, through their respective oil switches, or to the secondary-lighting battery, in which case they feed through double-pole ironclad switch fuses. This arrangement covers the possibility of a failure on the circuit breakers or their auxiliary circuits.

The second section of the switchboard controls the general lighting of all places external to the studio tower and including all offices, and corridors. These are fed from three feeders, each feeder supplying four floors and being controlled by a 300-ampère, single-phase oil switch. Since these circuits feed only administrative offices, change-over switches to connect the circuits to the storage battery have not been provided. Three circuits controlled by a 100-ampère, 3-phase oil circuit-breaker are provided for flood-lighting the building.

The fourth section of the switchboard controls the power supplies to the running plant, and consists of six circuit breakers through which are fed the following services:

One of 150 ampères for the control room charging motor generators and experimental transmitter.

One of 300 ampères for extract ventilating plant motors situated on the roof of the building.

Two of 500 ampères for controlling the ring main which feeds all ventilating plant, motors, etc., situated in the sub-basement.

One of 500 ampères for feeding lift motors.

One of 500 ampères for feeding a 265 h.p. motor driving the refrigerator situated in the sub-basement.

The heating services are controlled by one 3-phase, 150-ampère circuit breaker with neutral link.

The final section of the switchgear is for the control of the secondary lighting and emergency storage-battery circuits. As mentioned previously, this equipment is situated in a separate fire-proof chamber which has no access to the main switch-room. This arrangement was adopted as a precaution against explosion or fire in the main switch-room and to comply with the rules of the London County Council governing places of entertainment to which the public are admitted. This switchboard is of the flat back type. On it are mounted the meters and switchgear for the control of the secondary battery, the charging motor generator and the feeders of the secondary lighting system.

Emergency Lighting

The emergency storage battery, situated in the basement, consists of 123 cells, and has a capacity of 1,000 ampère-hours at a ten-hour rate of discharge. It is of the central station type contained in lead-lined, wood cases. Voltage control is obtained by a manually operated end-cell switch. It was necessary to provide for a fairly fine voltage regulation because the secondary lighting points in studios form part of the main lighting scheme. For this reason 20 end-cell taps are used, a larger number than is usually necessary for this purpose.

The adoption of end-cell regulation for a battery of this capacity is unusual, since this method of control necessitates the use of costly copper connexions, tends to reduce the life of the end-cells, and does not give such close regulation as a booster. However, against these disadvantages must be balanced the fact that in a building of this type it is advisable to reduce to a minimum the amount of rotating machinery and complicated switchgear. The end-cell method of regulating is less liable than a booster to mechanical trouble or to faulty switching operations.

Main storage battery—240 volts, 1,000 ampère-hours—for emergency lighting supply

To charge this battery, a motor-generator is installed, having an output of 150 ampères at 350 volts. Switching circuits are arranged so that the motor can derive its supply from the emergency alternator should it be necessary to charge the battery during the period when the main supply has failed.

The battery is floated on the busbars when the concert hall (to which the public will be admitted) is not in use, and the bulk of the secondary lighting load is taken by the motor generator. This ensures that the secondary battery is always in a fully-charged condition should the main power supply fail. In accordance with the regulations of the London County Council the motor generator is shut down when the concert hall is in use.

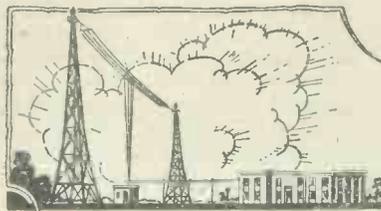

The final item of plant situated in the sub-basement is the stand-by generator set. This consists of a 5-cylinder, solid injection Diesel engine, developing 150 h.p. at 428 r.p.m. and direct-coupled to a 100 kW, 3-phase, 415-volt, 50-cycle alternator.

The usual compressed-air starting arrangements are provided, the air compressor being driven by a D.C. motor supplied from the storage battery. This arrangement enables the air receivers to be charged in the event of failure of the main A.C. supply. The generator set will be used only in case of emergency, and, in the normal course of events, will not carry any part of the main load.

As the reader has now been made familiar with the meanings of the terms resistance and resistivity, and the methods of ascertaining the total and effective values of resistances connected in series and in parallel, it remains to discuss certain practical points in connexion with the types of resistances employed in modern wireless receiving apparatus. As previously mentioned, these range from the filament rheostat of a few ohms to the gridleak resistance of 2 megohms, or more.

It is important, when selecting a resistance for any purpose, to remember that all resistances dissipate electrical energy in the form of heat, and that the amount of heat in any particular case depends upon the strength of current flowing through it. The heating effect, moreover, is not directly proportional to the current, but increases as the square of the current. In other words, if the current is doubled, the heating effect will be increased four times ($4=2^2$). Accordingly, the current to be carried is a factor which affects the selection (or construction) of a resistance in addition to the actual ohmic value.

An increase in temperature causes an increase in resistance. The percentage increase in resistance, per degree, is known as the temperature coefficient of the metal forming the conductor. In the case of copper, this is in the region of 0.25 per cent. but certain alloys have a much lower temperature coefficient, and are, therefore, adapted for use in resistances where, as a rule, any tendency towards unsteadiness in value is undesirable. Carbon is rather curious in that it has what is called a negative resistance coefficient—i.e., its resistance decreases as its temperature increases. If carbon-filament lamps are to be used as resistances in any circuit (and they are frequently so used in battery-charging operations), it is to be noted that the resistance of the filament falls by from 30 to 40 per cent. when it is made incandescent.

Filament Resistances

Modern thermionic valves are made to accurate standards, and the filaments are designed so that they will pass the correct current when the full voltage of the two, four, or six-volt accumulator is applied. Accordingly, modern receiving sets do not have filament regulating resistances, unless, perhaps, one provided to control a particular valve, for instance the first high-frequency amplifying valve.

Resistances of this type are usually variable, smoothly and continuously, and are known as rheostats. They are formed of resistance wire, made of one of the special alloys available for the purpose, wound in an open spiral, and secured around the edge of a circular base so that a rotatable metal arm, actuated by a suitable ebonite knob, moves evenly over and makes contact with the turns of the spiral. By this means, more or less resistance is included in series with the valve filament and the current is controlled accordingly. The S.W.G. of the wire is chosen to suit the current to be carried, and the open spiral provides additional cooling.

Anode and Grid Resistances

Although, at the present stage of this series of articles, it is undesirable to deal with the actual functions of anode and grid resistances, their main characteristics—merely as resistances—should be mentioned. Anode resistances require to have high ohmic values, ranging from 50,000 to 200,000 ohms, and as they are not called upon to carry more than a few milli-ampères of current, they may be constructed of very fine gauge resistance wire, which, however, must be well insulated because of the relatively high voltage applied to it. This type of anode resistance is specified as wire wound, in order to distinguish it from an alternative type which consists of a rod of composition having suitable resistance, and which is usually given some proprietary name.

Gridleak Resistances

The earliest form of this type of resistance was probably a thick line drawn with a blacklead pencil upon a strip of cartridge or blotting paper, which was then secured beneath two terminals, the "line," joining the terminals acting as a high resistance and having a value of the order of 2 megohms—more or less! Later, paper or vegetable fibre impregnated with some kind of graphite mixture formed the resistance element which was enclosed in a glass or ebonite tube provided with pointed metal ends by means of which the complete gridleak could be held in spring clips.

The modern gridleak consists of a thin rod of glass upon which has been sprayed an extremely thin layer of resistance metal, the rod then being enclosed in an evacuated glass tube provided with the usual conical end pieces, with which the metallised rod makes contact. By excluding the air from the tube, deterioration (and consequent change in resistance value) is prevented. It is possible to manufacture such resistances with values ranging from 0.5 to 5 megohms and they have the particular advantage that the conductivity of the resistance element is continuous, thus avoiding the troubles experienced in the earlier types.

ELECTRO MAGNETISM

When an electric current is flowing through a conductor there is a magnetic field around the whole length of the conductor. The lines of force of this magnetic field distribute themselves in concentric circles, as shown in Fig. 33. The reason for this is that moving electrons disturb the ether and the magnetic field is the result of this disturbance.

The extent of space occupied by the lines of force of this magnetic field will depend on the strength of the current flowing through the conductor. The stronger the current the greater the spread of the field and the greater the number of lines of force. Should the current be changing rapidly in strength the magnetic field will also change both in intensity and extent, growing as the current increases, and vice versa. Both the current and the magnetic field will vary in step, what one does the other will do.

should it be required to have a moving magnetic field there must be a changing current in the conductor producing it.

Thus, it is clear that moving electrons will produce a magnetic field. This is probably the reason why molecules are magnetic. The electrons flying with great speed in their atomical orbits disturb the ether and bring into existence a magnetic field around each orbit. In some molecules, it may be that the orbital magnetic fields add up to form a resultant magnetic field around the atom, and therefore around the molecule as a whole, and in some molecules the fields, owing to the difference in the direction of electronic flights, counteract each other so that there is no resultant field, or only a very weak one.

Just as moving electrons will produce a magnetic field so a moving magnetic field will cause electrons in a conductor to move. This means that a moving magnetic field is capable of inducing a movement of electrons in a conductor—i.e., an electric current. It does not matter which moves—the magnetic field or the conductor—provided that one of them is moving, but the movement must be such that the lines of force of the magnetic field "cut" the conductor at right angles or the conductor "cuts" the lines of force of the magnetic field at right angles. This phenomenon is known as electro-magnetic induction.

Electro-magnetic induction can be caused by bringing near a coil of wire a permanent magnet, as shown in Fig. 34. As the magnet approaches the coil, the lines of force of its magnetic field "cut" at right angles the turns of the coil, inducing a current in it. The presence of the current will be indicated by a suitable instrument connected across the coil.

But, when a current is flowing through the coil it is bound to produce a magnetic field of its own around the coil. For this reason each end of the coil will acquire a magnetic pole, as if the coil were a magnet. On investigating the polarity of the coil ends it is found that when the current is flowing in the same direction in which the hands of a clock are moving (clockwise direction), looking at the coil end on, the nearer coil end presents a north pole. If the current is flowing in the opposite direction the same end of the coil will have a south polarity (The author is sorry to have to disagree with the text-books on this point, but the difference is due to the fact that current flows from the negative terminal of a battery and not from the positive one, as some text-books still maintain.)

The remarkable point about induction is the peculiar behaviour of electrons in the atoms of the coil when a magnetic field is approaching it. Returning to Fig. 34, when the magnet approaches the end of the coil with the south pole leading, electrons in that end of the coil will choose such a direction of flow as to present to the approaching south pole of the permanent magnet a south pole of their own which is bound to repel the "invading" pole. As soon as the magnet is being withdrawn, the electrons change their direction of flow and thus change the polarity of the end of the coil facing the magnet. It is now a north pole which attracts the receding south pole of the magnet, as if trying to retain it.

The flow of electrons is always such as to oppose the action of the influencing magnetic field. This should be well noted. If the permanent magnet is approaching the coil with

Ultra Short-Wave Communication

By R. L. SMITH-ROSE, D.Sc., Ph.D., A.M.I.E.E.

5.—An Experimental Direction-Finder

AMONG the advantages which accompany the use of ultra-short wavelengths is the fact that for experimental work the apparatus required is relatively simple. As has been pointed out previously, wavelengths between 5 and 10 metres require inductance coils consisting of single-turn loops a few inches in diameter, and condensers having a maximum capacity of only 50 micro-microfarads or less. In the two previous articles a description was given of the general features of a simple two-valve loop receiver, and its use in the exploration of the field intensity radiated from a low-power transmitter at distances up to nearly twenty miles.

Now it is well known that the signal e.m.f. induced in a closed loop aerial is proportional to the cosine of the angle between the plane of the loop and the direction of the waves arriving from a transmitting station. Thus, as the loop is rotated, the intensity of the received signal varies from a maximum when the plane of the loop lies along the line of the arriving waves to a minimum or zero when it is turned at right angles thereto. If, therefore, we place our loop receiver upon a turntable and rotate it, a means is provided for taking bearings upon a distant transmitter by ascertaining the position of the loop for minimum signal strength. To obtain a sharp signal minimum and an accurate bearing in this manner, it is essential that no e.m.f. shall be picked up from the arriving waves by any part of the receiver except the loop itself.

Arrangement of D.F. Set

The photograph, Fig. 1, shows a view of the two-valve set already described, set up on a turntable mounted on a tripod for the taking of bearings.

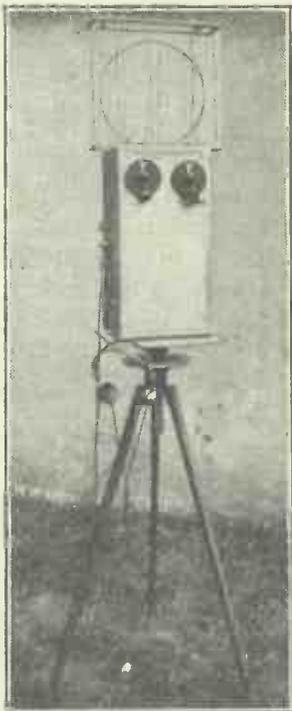

Fig. 1—Ultra short-wave receiver, with screened coil, mounted on tripod-turntable

Overlooking for the moment the screen of vertical wires surrounding the loop, the purpose of which will be described presently, it is seen that the whole of the receiver, other than the loop, is contained in a screened box and so the set is free from the direct pick-up of signals on the valve circuits. Further, it will be seen from the diagram of connexions reproduced in Fig. 2, that the receiving loop is tuned by two condensers in series, the lead between them being connected to the valve filaments and the screening box; also it was found that the capacities between the ends of the loop and the box were of the same order.

It might, therefore, be expected that the loop is, approximately, electrically symmetrical about its midpoint, and would give a satisfactory figure-of-eight or cosine diagram for direction-finding purposes. Simple aural tests, however, showed that this was not the case, and that the quality of the signal minima given by the set was much improved by the addition of an electric screen around the loop, in the manner commonly adopted in direction-finders on longer wavelengths. Accordingly, some measurements of the reception characteristics of the set were carried out when the loop was orientated in different directions relative to that of the transmitter.

Experiments with Loop Screens

The measurements were made in the manner adopted in the field intensity measurements described in the previous article. The D.F. set was installed at a distance of 50 metres from

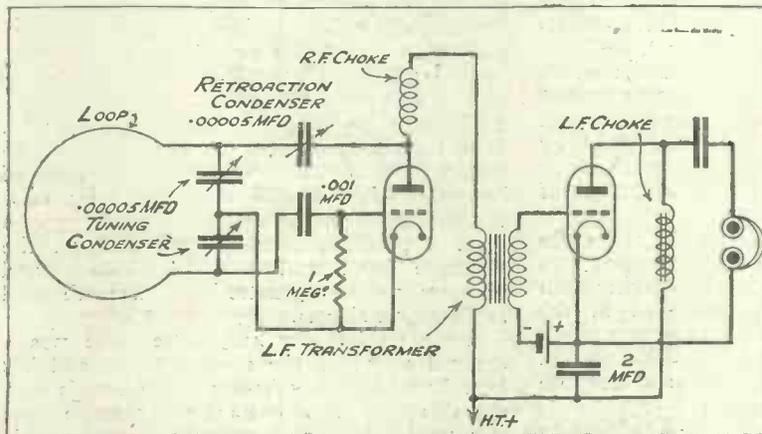

Fig. 2—Circuit of two-valve receiver used for D. F. experiments. Wavelength 4 to 10 metres the transmitter on the site which had proved most satisfactory for these measurements. Readings of the audio-frequency output were made for a series of orientations of the set while conditions at the transmitter remained constant on a wavelength of 8 metres. Care was taken that the observer should remain in a fixed position below the set, and a repetition of the measurements over a portion of the 360 degrees showed that the measurements could be made to a reasonable accuracy.

A polar reception diagram obtained in this manner for the loop receiver with no screen around the loop is shown in Fig. 3A. The two lobes of this diagram are dissimilar and the positions of signal minima are not well defined. A rectangular framework fifteen inches by four inches, comprising fifty wires fourteen inches long, was then placed around the coil, as shown in the photograph, Fig. 1. When the wires were bonded together but insulated from the metal box, only a small improvement in the diagram was obtained. The minima became a little sharper, but the two lobes were still asymmetrical, the strength of signal received on one side of the coil being about thirty per cent. less than on the other side.

When the screen was connected to the metal screening box containing the receiver, the signal minima became practically zero, as shown in Fig. 3B, although the polar diagram was still asymmetrical. By trial of various arrangements of spacing and bonding of the screen wires, it was found that this asymmetry could be compensated for by earthing to the box the wires on one side of the loop while the remainder were left insulated. The polar diagram of the receiver with this arrangement is shown in Fig. 3C, from which it will be seen that the two signal zeros are sharp and well-defined at positions 180 degrees apart, and that the diagram is approximately symmetrical about the line through the minima.

These experiments indicate that the fault with the unscreened loop is that the two sides are slightly out of balance in respect of their capacities to the box, to which the midpoint of the loop is virtually connected, and that this lack of symmetry can be compensated for by a suitable arrangement of the screen wires. It is possible that if the effect of the screen were applied in the reverse sense the asymmetry of the polar diagram could be accentuated to produce a unidirectional short-wave receiver, but the experiments were not continued in this direction.

Performance of D.F. Set

With the receiver set up on a turntable in the manner shown in Fig. 1, and the screen around the loop adjusted to give a symmetrical polar diagram as described above, the whole installation provides a simple and accurate means of taking bearings upon the signals received from a distant transmitter. After the set has been tuned, it is simply rotated until the signals pass through a minimum or silent position over an arc of 1 or 2 degrees. A line at right angles to the position of the loop at the centre of this arc then gives the bearing of the distant transmitter. A brief description of some tests carried out to ascertain the accuracy of the D.F. bearing so obtained under different conditions will, no doubt, be of interest.

When both transmitter and receiver were erected on an open site, the bearing was very accurate for the distance of 50 metres employed in the polar diagram measurements. When the experiments were repeated on a less satisfactory site, it was found that the observed

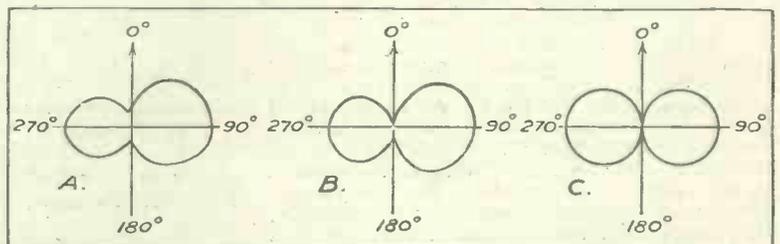

Fig. 3—Polar reception diagrams of D.F. set on a wavelength of 8 metres bearings were subject to errors ranging up to 15 degrees, which were attributable chiefly to the effect of secondary waves reflected from objects in the neighbourhood of the transmitter.

A series of experiments was then made, using the D.F. set to obtain bearings on signals from the main transmitter at distances up to twenty miles, and the results of some of these experiments are given in the following table:—

FROM TRANSMITTER

Position.	Distance. (miles.)	True bearing. (degrees.)	Error in observed D.F. bearing. (degrees.)
1	0.12	0	-17
2	0.12	20	-1
3	0.12	300	+15.
4	0.6	75	-6.
5	1.0	16	-7.
6	2.0	342	-5.
7	4.0	297	-1.
8	7.0	299	0.
9	7.0	303	-2.
10	8.0	393	-2.

In all the cases recorded the D.F. set was on a fairly satisfactory site, well away from such obstacles as trees and telegraph wires, which were found to have disturbing effects similar to those experienced on longer wavelengths. Under such favourable conditions it is seen from the table that as the distance of the D.F. set from the transmitter is increased, the accuracy of the observed bearings improves materially, and for distances of from four to eight miles the errors are probably within the limits of accuracy of the apparatus employed. It was also observed that the signal minima were more clearly defined at a distance, despite the unavoidable reduction in signal strength.

These facts are consistent with the idea that at the transmitter the trees and other objects surrounding it are acting as reflectors, and thus provide an effective source of radiation which is distributed over an appreciable area around the transmitting aerial itself. As the range of observation is increased, the angle subtended by this area diminishes until it becomes effectively a point source for the D.F. set at a distance of a few miles.

At distances of more than eight miles the signals were inaudible until the receiver was taken to the top of a hill, 500 feet higher than the transmitter, when, as described in the previous article, the signal intensity at a range of twenty miles was comparable with that at four miles along the flat ground, and accurate D.F. bearings were again possible.

These simple experiments serve to illustrate both the application and limitations of short-wave transmission and direction-finding. Unless the site around the transmitter is clear over a considerable area, reliably accurate bearing observations will not be possible except at distances for which the angle subtended at the receiver by the obstacles surrounding the transmitter is very small. Apart from this, direction-finding on ultra-short wavelengths would appear to offer possibilities under receiving conditions which have been found to give good results on longer wavelengths, so long as there is a direct-ray path from transmitter to receiver.

Effect of the Moon

To the Editor of WORLD-RADIO

SIR,—It has been remarked from several different sources that the moon has a decided effect on long-distance reception, and so, for an experiment, I procured twelve copies of World-Radio, starting from the issue of Dec. 11. I then turned to the "Which Station Was That?" column and counted all the medium-wave stations in North and South America which were given as answers in this section, and then I fixed the numbers in the form of a graph. Of course care has to be taken that the number refers to the proper week.

When the graph was finished I was able to find that there was a most decided peak during the week when the moon was at its fullest. The biggest peak was found to coincide with the period from Dec. 20-Dec. 27. Probably many readers remember a letter in which the writer commented on the wonderful reception obtained on the morning of Christmas Day. I am sending this letter in the hope that it will interest other readers interested in DX reception.

Wishing every success to World-Radio, especially in its new form.
Yours faithfully,
Dublin. R. M.

Below 100 Metres

By "MICROM"

IT is rather interesting to speculate upon any possible connexion between the very good reception conditions of Monday night, April 11, when both W2XAD and W8XK (25.25 m.) were good loud-speaker signals, and the serious eruptions in the Andes.

At 6.55 p.m. W2XAD was an excellent signal, marred only by the slow fading to occasional inaudibility. W8XK (25.25 m.) was also an excellent signal at 7.15 p.m., with only a trace of quick fading, which in no way marred the programme. As W8XK's carrier was considerably stronger than that of W2XAD, much less noise was noticed on this transmission.

In view of the differing opinions regarding the 25-metre Moscow transmitter, advantage was taken of the excellent conditions prevailing on Monday evening to measure the frequency difference between W8XK, 11,880 kc/s, and the 25-metre mystery station. An accurate determination of the frequency difference between these two stations was made by leaving the oscillator setting on the short-wave superhet. receiver constant at W8XK, and then re-tuning the calibrated intermediate-frequency stage until Moscow was accurately tuned in. The frequency separation was found to be 135 kc/s, which, assuming the frequency of W8XK to be correct, gives a frequency of 11,880+135=12,015 kc/s for Moscow, which is equivalent to 24.97 metres. It is, therefore, certainly not a station on 25.16 metres, but appears to be the half-wave of Moscow T.U., whose wavelength, by this determination, will be 49.94 metres.

At 8 p.m. on Monday, W2XAD on the 19-metre band and W8XK, Pontoise and Moscow, on the 25-metre band, were all good loud-speaker signals.

Rome on its new 42.7-metre wave was a colossal signal all the early evening, and has been heard regularly from 7 p.m. onwards each day this week in all cases the 42.7-metre wave was used. At first it was thought that this station was IAC, Coltano, relaying Rome, but it now appears to be the Rome S.W. transmitter, Prato Smeraldo working on a new wave. Judging by the reception of 25-metre waves in England this winter, which, of course, has been poor, one surmises that the Italian authorities have decided to put Rome on a wavelength which looks like being much more successful than the 25.4 metre wave.

Nairobi, on 49.5 metres, has been heard several times recently, notably on Thursday, April 14. Interference was very bad, however, but a clear announcement, "This is 7LO Nairobi," was heard at 6.56 p.m., followed by a musical programme. Although the carrier-wave of 7LO was fairly strong, the modulation depth was inclined to be poor, especially on speech, but to cover 5,000 miles on 500 watts is quite a good performance, and but for the static, Nairobi on several occasions would have a good loud-speaker signal.

EAQ, Madrid, on 30.4 metres, has again been heard testing with New York, and is a very steady and powerful signal in the North of England. Moscow, REN, has been heard on several occasions on 45.38 metres, but, as mentioned by Vernier, the quality is much inferior to that from Moscow T.U.

W3XAL on 49.18 metres was heard on one occasion, but only 70 per-cent. intelligible, and WOO on 62.5 metres has again been heard after midnight at good loud-speaker strength.

Both PLE and PLV, Bandoeng, were heard on their usual Tuesday afternoon transmission, at about 3.30 p.m. At this time PLE was the weaker station, PLV on 31.86 metres being a good loud-speaker signal. The modulation depth appears to be considerably higher on the 15.93 metre PLE, however.

(A) "L'Imparfait" et le "Passé simple" ou "Passé historique."

A chaque instant on me prie d'expliquer la différence entre l'Imparfait et le Passé défini ou Passé historique.

J'ai expliqué la chose plusieurs fois déjà, au cours de mes leçons ; mais comme la question présente d'assez grosses difficultés je vais m'exécuter une fois de plus.

Pour commencer il faut bien se rendre compte que l'Imparfait n'est autre chose que le présent transporté dans le passé. Prenons le passé comme point de départ, et l'imparfait est réellement un présent : à telle heure, tel jour, telle semaine, à telle date, à ce moment, alors, etc. . . . je faisais ceci, je faisais cela.

Le point de départ n'est pas toujours indiqué d'une façon précise, souvent même il est sous-entendu ; mais si nous donnons la peine d'examiner les différents emplois de l'imparfait, nous trouverons que nous avons toujours affaire à deux états ou à deux faits simultanés : celui qui est exprimé et celui qui a servi de point de départ. L'imparfait est donc le temps qui exprime une chose passée maintenant ; mais qui n'était pas achevée quand une autre a eu lieu : Ex. Je dormais quand vous êtes sorti.

Le passé historique (passé simple ou passé défini) exprime qu'une chose a eu lieu dans un temps complètement écoulé et conçu comme déterminé, sans considérer le moindre des conséquences que cette chose peut avoir dans le présent : Ex., à telle heure, tel jour, telle semaine, à telle date, à ce moment, alors, etc. . . . je fis ceci, je fis cela. Le passé historique est donc le temps de la narration, du récit ; c'est le temps dont on se sert en parlant de faits, qui ont lieu successivement sans indication de durée, ou bien en parlant de faits isolés considérés comme des points dans le passé.

Ceci posé, les choses suivantes s'expliquent facilement :—

1. L'imparfait est le passé descriptif.

Le passé historique est le passé narratif.

Ex. Les oiseaux chantaient, la forêt murmurait. (Alors, tout à coup, etc.) les oiseaux chantèrent, la forêt murmura.

2. L'imparfait exprime l'état de quelque chose à un moment donné.

Le passé historique exprime le passage d'un état à un autre.

Ex. Il souriait et se frottait les mains.

(A ce moment, à partir de ce moment, etc.) il sourit et se frotta les mains.

A cette heure-là il était à table.

A cette heure-là il se mit à table.

Il chantait = he was singing. Il chanta = he sang, he began to sing. Il aimait = he was in love. Il aima = he fell in love.

3. Enfin l'imparfait exprime qu'une action revenait régulièrement au moment dont on parle. Le passé historique exprime qu'une action est revenue régulièrement pendant un certain temps, mais qu'elle a cessé ensuite.

Ex. Il dînait au restaurant depuis quelques jours (et il continuait encore à dîner au restaurant).

Il dîna au restaurant pendant quelques jours (puis il cessa de dîner au restaurant).

Elle s'amusait depuis le matin.

Elle s'amusa jusqu'au matin.

Demandez-vous pour quelles raisons nous avons tantôt l'imparfait et tantôt le passé historique dans les exemples suivants :—

(a) Le vent soufflait. Vous dormiez à poings fermés. J'ai su que vous étiez à la campagne les jours derniers. Vous lisiez quand je suis entré. Elle dessinait pendant que j'écrivais.

(b) Il tua son ennemi. Elle ne dormit point de la nuit. Elle prit congé quelques instants après l'arrivée du patron. Quand il eut fermé la fenêtre il éteignit la lampe.

(B) Quelqu'un m'a écrit tout récemment pour me demander ce qu'il faut penser de l'expression ne . . . pas que : Ex. Il n'y a pas que vous ; il

FOREIGN LANGUAGES

ne vend pas que des parapluies ; nous n'avons pas que cela à faire, etc. . . .

Ce que j'en pense, mon bon Monsieur ? Je trouve que c'est une façon de parler très incorrecte, et dont on ne devrait jamais se servir, au moins dans la langue écrite. Je sais fort bien que cette syntaxe est très répandue, tellement répandue que des auteurs célèbres se sont permis de l'employer ; mais ce n'est pas une raison pour que vous vous en serviez. Ne . . . que signifie seulement ; ce qui revient à dire que ne . . . que a pris un sens positif ; pour rendre le sens négatif on y a ajouté pas tout court, puisqu'on ne pouvait ajouter un second ne à celui qui s'y trouvait déjà. De cette façon le sens de seulement n'est plus représenté dans l'expression ne . . . pas que que par que, ce qui est insuffisant. D'ailleurs la négation est contenue dans le ne, pas n'y ajoute rien ; il s'ensuit que ne . . . pas que signifie ne . . . que, ni plus ni moins. C'est bien ainsi qu'on l'entendait au 17^{ème} Siècle, puisque nous trouvons dans Corneille :—

"Ils ont vu Rome libre autant qu'ils ont vécu, Et ne l'auront point vue obéir qu'à son prince."
(Horace, Acte III, Scène VI).

ce qui signifie évidemment qu'ils ont vu Rome soumise à son prince, et non à d'autres maîtres ; tout comme si Corneille avait écrit : "Et ne l'auront vue obéir qu'à son prince." Pour en faire une expression négative il faudrait pouvoir dire ne . . . pas ne que. Or cela n'est pas possible. Evitons donc cette syntaxe et disons tout bonnement : Vous n'êtes pas le seul ; il vend autre chose que des parapluies (il vend non seulement des parapluies . . .) ; nous avons bien autre chose à faire, etc. . . .

GERMAN

NASFÜHREN (to lead by the nose) from die Nase : Goethe uses nasführen in the sense of "to pull one's leg," but usually one says "Er führt sie alle an der Nase herum" (leads them by the nose) like a man leading a bear with a ring through its nose. It is curious that the nose is so conducive to the formation of phrases in German and English : Er steckt seine Nase in alles (busybody)—Er sieht es nicht, bis man ihn mit der Nase drauf stösst.—Ich werde es ihm unter die Nase reiben (rub it in)—Er hat es ihm auf die Nase gebunden (He has told him (with intent to deceive)).—Das Haus sticht mir in die Nase (I would like to have it)—Er rümpft die Nase über alle (turns up)—Ich bin gewohnt, die Nase hoch zu tragen (sign of pride)—Ein hochnäsiger Bursche (stuck-up fellow)—Ich habe es ihm an der Nase angesehen (I guessed it)—Er soll sich an seine Nase fassen (mind his own business)—Er hat es mir vor der Nase weggeschnappt.—Sie tanzen ihm auf der Nase herum (do with him what they like)—Er machte mir eine lange Nase (He made a long nose at me)—Er musste mit langer-Nase davonziehen (disappointed)—Er hat eine Nase bekommen (has been reproved)—Er hat ihnen eine wächserne Nase gedreht (He has taken them in)—Immer der Nase nach (straight on!)—etc., etc.

schulmeistern (to dogmatise, to act the pedant) from der Schulmeister (schoolmaster) : Er schulmeister alle, seine Schüler sowohl wie seine Freunde.

schriftstellern (to scribble) from der Schriftsteller (writer, author) : Er schriftstellert immer weiter, ohne etwas Ordentliches zu-stande zu bringen (He goes on scribbling without producing anything of importance). ratschlagen (to consider, consult) from der Ratschlag (advice) : Sie ratschlagten von Morgen bis Abend, ohne zu einem Entschluss zu kommen ; aber sie haben geratschlagt bis in die Puppen hinein (no end).

brandmarken (to brand, stigmatize) from the uncommon die Brandmarke for Brandmal (a mark by burning, a stigma) : Er hat ihn als Feigling gebrandmarkt (branded).

wallfahr(t)en (to go on a pilgrimage) from die Wallfahrt (pilgrimage) : Sie wallfahrten or wallfahrteten nach Jerusalem und andern Wallfahrtsorten. Wallfahren has been formed from the older wallfahrten. Likewise now regularly der Wallfahrer for older Wallfahrter.

wetteifern (to emulate) from der Wetteifer (emulation) : Sie wetteifern miteinander um den Preis. Sie haben immer miteinander gewetteifert (as rivals).

wirtschaften (to manage a house or estate) from die Wirtschaft (management) : Er hat immer schlecht gewirtschaftet (managed his affairs). Die Soldaten haben in dem Dorf fürchterlich gewirtschaftet (The soldiers have played havoc in the village by devastation).

Of some of these verbs the original compound noun no longer exists in the present language, e.g. :—

brandschatzen (to raise contributions in time of war, to ravage) from an obsolete Brandschatz : Sie haben die ganze Provinz gebrandschatzt. Its real meaning was "to pay a sum" in order to prevent one's house being burnt down.

lobhudeln (to praise fulsomely) : Diese widerlichen Lobhudler (toady flatterers) haben gelobhudelt bis ihre Lobhudelei (nauseous adulation) allen zuwider war.

lustwandeln (to promenade, saunter for pleasure) from obsolete Lustwandel : Sie lustwandelten im Park auf dem grünen Rasen.

mutmassen (to surmise) : Das hätte ich nicht gemutmasst, aber er mutmasste so etwas seit Wochen. Noun now : die Mutmassung. nachwandeln (to walk in one's sleep) : Ein Nachtwandler nachwandelte auf dem Dach umher.

rad(e)brechen (to murder a language) : Er radebrechte französisch, wie er englisch immer geradebrecht hat, aber er sprach deutsch ganz gut.

wetterleuchten (es wetterleuchtet, there is sheet-lightning) from an old Wetterleucht = Blitz (lightning), leuchtet is a corruption of leich (play, unsteady movement) : Es hat schon gestern gewetterleuchtet und heute wetterleuchtet es schon wieder.

liebkosten (to fondle) from subst. "Lieb" "to say pleasant things," to fondle :—Sie liebkosten die Kinder die ganze Zeit. Er liebt es, sie zu liebkosten. Er hat mich geliebkost.

liebäugeln (to ogle) : Sie liebäugelten die ganze Zeit. Sie haben wieder mal gehörig geliebäugelt.

Exercise 25 (Fünfundzwanzigste Aufgabe)

II (a) (1) Sie halten eine Versammlung. (2) Sie kommen alle zusammen. (3) Wir werden einig. (4) Wir setzen einen Tag fest. (5) Er tut es den andern zuvor. (6) Er trägt den Sieg davon. (7) Der Zaunkönig fliegt hervor (or hinaus or heraus). (8) Sie erkennen ihn als ihren König an. (9) Er widerspricht mir. (10) Er hinterlässt mir sein Haus.

(b) (1) hielten, hatten . . . gehalten, um . . . zu halten. (2) kamen . . . zusetzen, waren . . . zusammengekommen, um . . . zusammenzukommen. (3) wurden . . . waren . . . geworden, um . . . zu werden. (4) setzten . . . fest, hatten . . . festgesetzt, um . . . festzusetzen. (5) tat . . . zuvor, hatte . . . zuvorgetan, um . . . zuvorzutun. (6) trug . . . davon, hatte . . . davongetragen, um . . . davonzutragen. (7) flog hervor, war hervorgeflogen, um hervorzufiegen. (8) erkannten .. an, hatten .. anerkannt, um .. anzuerkennen. (9) widersprach, hatte .. widersprochen, um .. zu widersprechen. (10) hinterliess, hatte .. hinterlassen, um .. zu hinterlassen.

III (1) Als die Vögel einen König wählen wollten, da hielten sie eine Versammlung. (2) Sobald sie alle zusammengekommen waren, schrieten, piffen und sangen sie. (3) Da sie lange nicht einig wurden, so setzten sie einen Tag zum Wettfliegen fest. (4) Die Stunde wurde bestimmt, in (or zu) welcher die ganze Gesellschaft sich erheben sollte. (5) Er versteckte sich in den Federhosen des Adlers, so dass dieser es nicht merkte. (6) Der Zaunkönig, welcher über dem Adler hoch in die Luft flog, wurde König. (7) Sie verfolgten und neckten ihn, weil er eine so kleine Gestalt war. (8) Er verkroch sich in die Zäune und Hecken, um Ruhe zu haben. (9) Wenn man in den Zäunen und Hecken sucht, so wird man ihn finden.

IV. Die Vögel hielten eine Versammlung, weil sie einen König wählen wollten. Als sie alle zusammengekommen waren, piffen, sangen, schrieten und schnatterten sie, so dass niemand ein Wort hören konnte. Da sie nicht einig werden konnten, erklärten sie (or kamen sie überein), dass der, welcher am höchsten fliegen konnte, König sein (or werden) sollte. Zur bestimmten Stunde flogen sie alle in die Luft und versuchten es einer dem andern zuvorzutun. Dem Adler gelang es, höher als all(e) die andern zu fliegen, aber als er nicht mehr höher fliegen konnte, kroch ein Zaunkönig, der sich in den Federhosen des Adlers versteckt hatte, hervor und erhob sich über allen in die Luft, so dass er König wurde. Aber alle Vögel neckten und verfolgten ihn, weil er so winzig klein war. Schliesslich verbarg sich der Zaunkönig in Hecken und Zäunen, um Ruhe zu haben, und da finden wir ihn bis auf den heutigen Tag.

Last Week's Log

(April 10-16)

By "NORTHERNER"

THE week between April 10 and 16 has been a curious mixture of good days and bad, while throughout the whole period we have had a definite reminder of the approaching warmer weather in the form of small atmospheric which became rather troublesome when any degree of amplification was used. Interference was worst on the long waves, with evidence of distant thunderstorms, while the medium-wave band suffered from background noise, caused for the most part through the magnification of slight static, and heard as an irritating "frying" sound in the loud-speaker.

Signal strength, however, maintained its really excellent level of the past few weeks, and among the greater number of the better-known stations there was but little change in the volume with which they could be received.

Among the long-wave transmitters, Huizen, Radio-Paris, Kalundborg, and Oslo were the best; Moscow was not so well received owing to interference, while Warsaw seems to be slowly diminishing in strength both during his daytime and evening hours of working. Motala was much the same—a good signal but still lacking his one time punch, while Königs-Wusterhausen can always provide splendid reception. Eiffel Tower, I hardly ever, nowadays, find worth much attention while Warsaw is working. For those who can tune in on the top of the medium-wave band, Wilno, in common with so many of the other Polish stations, can often be heard at very good volume but, of course, there is a fair amount of morse interference in the region of his wavelength. Budapest has a varied report for the week: Sunday V.G.; Monday and Tuesday, fair; Wednesday, weak; Thursday, excellent; Friday and Saturday, moderately good.

SPANISH

El verbo agradecer

EL otro día un alumno mío me sometió su traducción de una carta comercial; principiaba (empezaba) como sigue:—
"Escribimos la presente para agradecerles a Vds. por su favor del 1º cte."

En esta frase hay tres faltas mayúsculas (capitales, muy grandes), que son las que indico en bastardilla (italics). El verbo agradecer no significa to thank (dar las gracias) sino to feel grateful for, de modo que está mal empleado en la frase citada, cuya traducción correcta sería:—
"Escribimos la presente para darles a Vds. las gracias por su atenta (carta) del 1º cte."

Debo advertir (remark) que en español la palabra favor nunca se aplica a una carta, sino que siempre representa un favor hecho, un servicio prestado.

También debe notarse que agradecer no toma la preposición por, la cual únicamente se emplea después del participio pasado de este verbo. Estudien mis lectores los ejemplos siguientes:—

Agradecemos a Vds. el favor que nos han hecho; se lo agradecemos mucho.

Estamos (o quedamos) muy agradecidos a Vds. por el favor, etc.

Agradeceremos a Vds. (que) nos contesten a vuelta de correo (we shall be obliged or feel grateful if you will reply by return of post). Nótese bien el uso del subjuntivo, con o sin que (que suele omitirse), en esta última frase donde toda la segunda cláusula forma el objeto directo de agradecer.

Lectura (continúa la relación de la señorita viajera)

—"Mil gracias"—le dije yo—"por tanta bondad. Si todos los españoles son tan amables como Vd., no tendré por qué quejarme."

—"Hay de todo (there are all sorts), señorita"—me contestó, y desapareció.

A new transmitter has made an appearance since my last review, and is as yet unidentified. This station was working between Sebastopol and the North Regional, causing rather severe interference to the last named round about 10 p.m. Prague is still outstanding, and never fails to give an excellent performance, while Brussels No. 1 is as good as ever. I see that the new transmitter at Florence is not yet using his full power, which no doubt accounts for the rather poor reception to date. Rome, on the whole, gave good results, weaker than formerly, but with quite sufficient volume for very pleasing reception. Stockholm is still varying greatly, and cannot be relied upon from day to day, but Toulouse seems to have steadied up during the week under discussion, and was heard equally well on all occasions. Katowice remains a fine signal, and Lwów still retains the good position he has held for some time now. Radio Algiers has not proved very satisfactory in the north this winter, jamming being the chief cause of the failure. Beromünster and Sottens are still almost as reliable as ever but on some nights there has been a little more fading than usual. Berlin-Witzleben was weakish but Langenberg appears to be at the top of his form again, and forms an excellent alternative on any evening. For some time now I have been able to obtain a much better result than formerly from Cork, while Dublin shows only a very poor record. Turin was good on the majority of nights, and Trieste is still very powerful, suffering from occasional heterodynes. Heilsberg is still a first-rate station, and seldom shows the slightest change. Mühlacker, and Frankfurt were both very good. Strasbourg is not so reliable as he was. Nurnberg and Göteborg are showing great promise of a much longer good spell than last year, and up to the time of writing do not seem to have shown any seasonable deterioration. Bordeaux does not seem to be quite such a good station in the North, and Mientras me desayunaba en el buffet (salón de refrescos), me hizo mucha gracia (it greatly amused me) ver como, al reunirse los viajeros con los que los esperaban en la estación, se abrazaban y se besaban los hombres unos a otros, costándome mucho trabajo contener la risa (to refrain from laughing).

Por fin, me encontré instalada en el rápido de (que iba a) Madrid en compañía de unos alemanes, y otra vez tuve que aprovechar mis escasos (scanty) conocimientos del castellano para poder sostener una conversación.

En el trayecto (recorrido—run) desde Irún a San Sebastián se disfruta de unas vistas preciosas (lovely) de esta famosa playa (beach). Luego, durante las primeras horas del viaje tierra adentro (inland), hacia el sur, el paisaje es un encanto (es encantador—charming).

Interference between Stations

(April 10-16)

IN addition to Madrid EAJ7, who, as mentioned last week, has deliberately left his allotted wavelength, another Union-Radio station, Seville, has changed his wavelength. Seville used 815 kc/s, his correct frequency, which, though an exclusive one had become almost a common wave; in fact, three foreign stations were using it: Fredriksstad, Helsinki, and Radio L.L. Paris, the last-named using actually 812 kc/s. Seville is now using 790 kc/s, very close to Lwów (788 kc/s), which is scarcely interfered with owing to Seville being weak.

Another Spanish station, Barcelona EAJ15 Radio-Associacion, who was interfering badly with Gleitwitz (1,185 kc/s), by using 1,186 kc/s, has reverted, since the 17th, to his correct frequency of 1,193 kc/s. This station is to increase its power up to 6 or even to 10 kW.

Radio-Lyons (latterly a stronger signal), who shares 1,049 kc/s with Montpellier PTT, was off his usual place on the 12th, being then on 1,036 kc/s, where he was heterodyning both the British common wave and Viipuri (1,031 kc/s).

The new Russian station (previously on 269 kc/s) has gradually gone up to 272 kc/s and, by reason of his considerable power, is now heterodyning Oslo (277 kc/s) rather severely, the separation being only 5 kc/s. Moreover, the interference caused to Oslo for some months by Tiflis (280 kc/s), instead of decreasing, as one would expect with the lengthening of days, seems to have become aggravated. Possibly Tiflis has increased his power, which was already 10 kW.

Hilversum and Tallinn have exchanged wavelengths.

although he has a good run for several nights, there are other times when he is barely audible.

Other stations which were well received were Leipzig, Breslau, Hörby, and Bratislava.

Heard on the Continent

By "CENTRAL EUROPEAN"

AFTER having experienced summer reception conditions at the end of March, we have had since then another week of most perfect winter reception. Perhaps this has been due to the damp and rainy weather we have had during the period under review. With the exception of the region below 250 metres—subject to specially strong fading—reception has been equally good on all wave-lengths.

Morse interference is an increasingly disturbing factor on the long-wave region. For instance, it is hopeless to expect to hear Kaunas. Radio-Paris, too, continues to remain silent. It is a mystery why this 75 kW transmitter is less audible than the smallest Spanish transmitter. Reception of Daventry National has been excellent, and no longer subject to the morse interference of only a few weeks ago. Reception of Huizen has greatly improved, and the audibility of Lahti has also grown much better. But Warsaw is still the best heard of all European stations. Its signal strength is astonishing. Reception of Motala has been better than during preceding weeks, but the Swedish programmes are far better heard via Hörby or Göteborg. I am able to record a great improvement in the reception of Kalundborg, even during the daytime. Istanbul is again audible. Reception of Oslo has been excellent.

Leningrad was by far the best heard of all the Russian stations; being well received even during the morning hours. Minsk would appear to have increased its power. Reception of Ljubljana has been quite good and free from all fading. So also with Budapest; this station appears to have regained its strength of last year. Reception of Lausanne, which I have not been able to record once during the last three years, has, strangely enough, been quite excellent during the last fortnight. The situation between Palermo and Sundsvall is an interesting one. Although the former's power is a third of that of the latter, and although it is situated four times as far from my set as the Swedish station, Palermo's strength is considerably the greater.

Not much could be heard of Florence, for the neighbouring Moscow experimental transmitter mars its reception. The most powerful signal by far, in this region, has again been Prague—to the detriment of the North Regional station. On the common wave, 662 kc/s, the small Spanish transmitter, San Sebastian, was audible on several evenings.

I have also heard a French experimental transmitter, using a frequency of 671 kc/s, quite a strong and steady signal. This is probably the new 7 kW transmitter of the Paris School of Telegraphy, which is to operate till the Paris high-power station at Villebon-sur-Yvette is completed. Rome has been strongly interfered with by a Norwegian station—apparently either Aalesund or Notodden must have left the common frequency of 671 kc/s. Stockholm could be received at full loud-speaker strength.

Cuxhaven (Germany); coastal radio station; telephony with ships; also fog beacon and D.F. station. FUZZ (Warminster): Regret, cannot trace. TURBOT (Edinburgh): Moscow (Stalin). G. G. (Bournemouth): (4) regret, cannot supply this information; (5) probably ON4 (quatre) PA, amateur experimental transmitter, at Ghent (Belgium). IMA OORS (Glasgow): Moscow (Stalin) on 424.3 m. (707 kc/s). HALLIGEY (Cardiff): Many thanks for information. LISTEN (Loughborough): (1) Moscow (Stalin); (2) San Sebastian (E.A.18). OVRUM (Stamford Hill): Regret, cannot trace. TRACY (Liverpool): (302) DOA. Döberitz (Germany); (303) GBC or GCRX, Rugby. MALOUIN (N.1): (1) most of the French stations advertised a relay of a performance of La Samaritaine (Rostand) from Paris PTT, but possibly altered programme by Lille PTT or Toulouse (PTT); (2) cannot understand W/L; only French play advertised was broadcast by Radio Strasbourg; (3) apparently Settens, but not advertised in programmes. SLIM (York): (1) Vienna Experimental; (2) Reykjavik; (3) Leningrad. CURIOUS (Monkseaton): Cuxhaven Radio (Germany), telephony with trawlers on 177.5 m. TELL ME (Cardiff): Regret, cannot trace. OBERTA (Twickenham): Apparently harmonic of Heston airport (833 m.). GRID LEAK (S.W.1): Wilno relaying Warsaw. DDD (Helensburgh): Rome (2RO) on new wavelength. IWONDA (Dulwich): Madrid (E.A.17). 1-20 (Shepherd's Bush): Eiffel Tower relaying commentary on football match (France v. Italy) played at the Colombes Stadium (Paris).

Which Station Was That?

Answers to Correspondents

BM/NDDA (N.16): Grenoble PTT; own concert. HOT BUN (Margate): Two stations heard, namely, Heilsberg (interval signal and weather report); Turin (music). WOTWOZIT (Purley): Details fully tally with V.A.R.A. and V.P.R.O. broadcasts from Hilversum on 298.1 m. EXPERIMENTER (Treherbert): Apparently test; possibly Radio Strasbourg or Brno. PINNER (Hastings): DEO, Nauen (Germany) on 29 m. LAPIN (Dufftown): We have no information regarding a new Dutch short-wave transmitter relaying Hilversum on about 42 m.; these broadcasts were recently carried out on about 49.9 m. FIBRE BILL (Penge): Surely 1,352 kilocycles, not metres; Radio Normandie (Fécamp), sponsored broadcast. MAYBE (Fulham): DGK, Nauen (Germany). SE CLEAN DEAG (Waterford): (1) Vague, but possibly Petrovsk-Volga (RV55) on 411 m.; (2) two vague; regret, cannot trace. GOLDFINCH (Nottingham): Apparently a test by PCJ, Hilversum, which was due to start up again this month. MYSTIC CALL (Shadwell): Surely a "leg-pull"; local experimental transmitter. BLUCHER (Walbottle): Would tally with harmonic of Daventry National. LAPIN (Dufftown): Details of political speeches relayed by Paris PTT and official provincial stations are seldom published; are usually taken by Bordeaux-Lafayette, Strasbourg, Lille, Rennes, etc. As you do not estimate W/L we cannot indicate transmitter heard. PAL (Bristol): Poste Parisien; new high-power transmitter testing. COMOB (Lee-on-the-Solent): Are you sure of your wavelength? (7) The Rome operatic broadcast was also transmitted on that night on 25.4 m.; we cannot trace any relay on 43.2 m.; (8) possibly Spanish experimental transmitter with which W/L would tally. It is frequently heard working on Saturday afternoons. NIMROD (Bristolford): Apparently trans-Atlantic telephony (Rugby). STANTON (Denmark Hill): Has also been reported by other listeners in and around your district. Suggest local amateur experimental transmitter. WARRIOR (St. Leonards-on-Sea): Madrid (E.A.7) now on 410 m. BOGER (Huddersfield): Brussels (No. 1); luncheon hour transmission. SWIFT (Derby): Berlin (Witzleben) extended transmission; Presidential Elections. QUE ESTACION (Chesterfield): Nijni Novgorod (U.S.S.R.) has been reported on 1,685 m. BRANDON (Buckhurst Hill): Many thanks for your information. OBTELLE (East Didsbury): Please number your queries. (1) Leningrad; (2) Motala relaying Stockholm. KINNAIRD (Paisley): Madrid (E.A.7) on 410 m. WAIT (Wigan): (1) Heilsberg relaying Berlin. Special late broadcast in view of Presidential Elections; (2) Madrid (E.A.7) on new wavelength. LEAPYEAR (Dundee): Reykjavik. CAMINIX (Shadwell Heath): Madrid (E.A.7). STIFFY (Dagenham): Moscow (Technical High School) on 358 m.; relays T.U. and Old Komintern. FARAJ ALLAH (Bridlington): Königs Wusterhausen (Press). T. T. T. (Southall): (1) Frankfurt-on-Main relaying Stuttgart programme; (2) Hamburg broadcasts weather and news at 4.45 a.m. G.M.T. STATION SELECTOR (Aldershot): (1) Malmö relaying Stockholm; (2) Radio Normandie (Fécamp) on 1,352 kc/s. ENQUIRER (Walthamstow): (186) Kiev; (167) Tallinn. KNOB TWISTER (Edmonton): Leningrad; English Lesson. TINKER (Lochgoilhead): (1) Barcelona (E.A.15); (2) Madrid (E.A.7) on new W/L (410 m.). CARNAM (Cornwall): (1) possibly Sverdlovsk (RV5); (2) Nijni Novgorod is said to be working on 502.4 m.; (3) possibly Odessa (RV13) on 450.4 m. AL BABA'S CAMEL (Londonderry): Radio Sonora, Oporto (Portugal). Has also been heard on 243.5 m. (2) Madrid (E.A.7) on 411.5 m. WHAR-IZ-IT (Rothsram): (1) Moscow (Stalin); concert for night workers; (2) Leningrad. JOHNNY SPIELT AUF (Ashorne): GGM (Bar Light Vessel, Mersey); GGG (Round Island, Scilly); NMM (May Island, Firth of Forth); GGB, South Bishop L.V. PAT (Dalsdon): Apparently British amateur experimental transmitter. To identify you must pick-up call-sign. NOVICE (Liverpool): Regret, cannot give information desired as it is seldom that details of these operatic relays are published in programmes. Alterations are frequently made and the broadcast is announced only on the previous day. VAL (Peterborough): (1) Moscow (Stalin); (2) possibly Odessa (RV13). HOT BUN (Margate): Genoa; S.P. from Turin, Trieste, etc. The call has been altered to "Radio Alt' Italia". RHINO (Thornton Heath): (1) WOO, Deal Beach (N.J.) working with Atlantic liners, in this instance with S.S. "Olympic"; (2) aerodrome short-wave transmission. R. M. W. (Ashford): (1) Lillis; (2) scale of signal strength, see last issue. SHORT-WAVE CLIENT (Hockington): LR3, Radio Nacional, Buenos Aires (315.8 m.). GREEN INK (Ramsgate): Leningrad; International concert from the Radio Theatre. SEARCHER (Ramsgate): Lille PTT. 3817 (Cardiff): Surely Moscow (T.U.) on 50 m. 17 YEARS (Wythall): Apparently amateur experimental transmitter; gramophone record. SGRUM (Belfast): (1) cannot trace, but we have reports of a new Russian s/w station working on about 39.50 m.; (2) new Italian s/w transmitter (Tripoli) testing on about 43.75 m. FUSCUS (Lowestoft): Reykjavik; gramophone records. Icelandic local time is 2 hours behind B.S.T. MOVING COIL (Fulham): (1) regret, cannot trace transmitter as you do not give call-sign, but station called was that of an amateur experimenter at Rossendale (Lancs); (2) Scheveningen-Haven (Holland); commercial transmitter (no broadcasts of entertainments, etc.). HONTUS (Colne): (A) Radio Normandie (Fécamp); (b) Moscow (Stalin); (c) Leningrad; (d) Prague. S. G. (Bournemouth): (1) we have no information regarding a Swiss short-wave station on that wavelength; in this instance the relay may have been carried out through GBU, Rugby on 30.15 m. It was through Radio Nations that most of the speeches from Geneva were transmitted. KNOTSURE (Sunderland): LR3, Radio Nacional, Buenos Aires. JA GEE (Sittingbourne): WMI, Deal Beach (N.J.) 29.50 m. relaying programme to Switzerland and later calling GBW, Rugby. INTERESTED (Mosely): Warsaw. REG. No. 10,145 (Gosforth): Tallinn is now on Hilversum's old W/L., the latter having exchanged channels with this transmitter. GILMOUR (Thornton): Proprietary names must not be used as noms-de-plume. Slight technical hitch in transmission. EARLY RISER (Ingatestone): N.C.R.V. broadcast from Huizen (1,875 m.); possibly gramophone records. BROMIUM A (Bath): Possibly a test prior to relay to U.S.A.; possibly heard through GBS, Rugby (24.60 m.) working with WND, etc., Deal Beach (N.J.). TEST VALLEYITE (Whitchurch); JOHN O' THE DIAL (Highgate); ITALIAN (Bermondsey); JOHN O' THE DIAL (Highgate); SHORTWAVER (Nuneaton); GRID BIAS (Thornton Heath); DUSTY MILLER (Thornaby-on-Tees); JAY (Harrigate): Prato Smeraldo (Rome) testing on new wavelength (42.7 m.); a relay of the Rome (IRO) operatic performance. SHORT-WAVER (Nuneaton): (a) Dornaa (81.85 kc/s.); (b) IAC, Coltano (23.5 m. and other wavelengths); (c) m.); (d) FLUMUXED Russelede (Belgium) on 15.025 and 29.04 m. FLUMUXED (W.1): Bergen relaying Oslo. A GOOD HAUL (Sidcup): Government stations; wave calibration. SUSIE (Port Sunlight): Moscow (Stalin); concert for night workers. BASH (Margate):

A Dutch Oratorio

An oratorio to Dutch words is something of a rarity, as the Dutch people sing almost as well in English, French or German, and even in some cases in Hungarian and other remote languages, as they do in their own tongue. That gave the first performance of Jerusalem, by Johan Winnubst, the organist of the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Utrecht, a special interest, which is being renewed by its second performance; it is being broadcast on the HUIZEN long-wave (1875 metres) to-night. The interest is not only in that, however, but also because an important feature of the work is the combination of the spoken voice, of both soloists and chorus, with the orchestra. Another feature of the work is that it opens in a turbulent and often harshly discordant manner and gradually becomes more tranquil, to finish with a beautiful setting of the Latin hymn "Coelstis urbs Jerusalem," entirely in concords or common chords. Mr. Winnubst, the composer and conductor of the work, is a comparatively young man, but is regarded by many as one of the most promising of a number who are leading the way to the beginning of a distinctively Dutch school.

A Stockholm Cereimonial

The changing of the guard at the beautiful Royal Palace of Stockholm is one of the most popular events in the daily life of the Swedish capital. The broadcasting of the ceremony and the military band concert which accompanies it, has made it a feature in Swedish radio programmes which is very much looked forward to by listeners.

IMPROVE YOUR RANGE

The better the anode supply, the better the reception. Dry batteries or accumulators cannot maintain a steady voltage, and, for this reason, a battery-operated set is merely striving to give results for the greater part of every year. Why not, therefore, convert your present battery set to A.C. mains operation? An eliminator incorporating will definitely help you to get more foreigners, by providing the adequate and constant voltage necessary to run your set at its maximum efficiency. And . . . such an eliminator will last for years. If you are buying an eliminator, see that it incorporates the Westinghouse Metal Rectifier. Should you, however, prefer to build your own, our booklet "The All Metal Way" will help you, as it contains constructional details and circuits. Send 3d. in stamps and get a copy now.

Here's the result of a searching test of the Columbia RADIO-GRAPHPHONE

'Amateur Wireless' April 2nd 1932

Make no mistake, this is quite the last word in value for money, and should do much to popularise the radio-gramophone idea among listeners of limited means Had the makers set out to produce the very best three-valve radio-gramophone, irrespective of price, I should have said that they had succeeded First, I played through a few records, and noted the rich, full tone of the reproduction. I also noted that even with the volume control at maximum, corresponding to great volume, there was no sign of overloading I was able to get Muhlacker practically clear of London Regional. Such selectivity is quite exceptional. It holds good for the separation of adjacent high-power foreigners throughout the tuning range. Thus, I was able to get Softens clear of Midland Regional, and Prague and Langenberg were absolutely free of North Regional "Clean" and silent background I tuned in thirty at one sitting of just under an hour. This was on an indoor aerial . . .

Tito Schipa

For so many years already he has been a well-known figure on all the world's opera stages that we think of him as a cosmopolitan rather than as an Italian. But he does belong to the land which has given the world so many of its great singers. Born in 1889, at Lecce, he made his debut, at the age of twenty-two, at Veracelli: thence, by way of Europe, he conquered America too, until now he has few rivals in his own sphere. He sings to-night in the concert from the ITALIAN STATIONS. Our portrait shows him as Des Grieux in Puccini's Manon Lescaut.

The Curse of the Ring
The Nibelung's Ring, which gives Wagner's great cycle its name, endowed its possessor with dominion over the whole world. But it carried with it, too, a relentless curse. At the beginning of The Dusk of the Gods, the last drama in the cycle, the ring has come into the possession of Siegfried, but the Nibelung race are still scheming to win it back from him. Hagen, the son of the Nibelung Alberich, who first stole the gold and fashioned the ring, is a mighty warrior, head of the clan of the Gibichungs, and possessed of some of his race's magic lore. When the curtain rises on the stately hall where he reigns, he is himself sitting on guard. Alberich rises from the earth, and urges on him the need of every cunning guile to secure the ring; the music of this scene is sombre and mysterious. Then a beautiful orchestral passage heralds day-break, and Siegfried enters. In the first Act, Hagen had robbed him of his memory by a magic potion, which blotted from his mind all thought of Brünnhilde, the wonderful warrior maiden whom he had found asleep on the rock and had won as his bride. Now he is to wed Gutrune, Hagen's sister, and is to give Brünnhilde as wife to Gunther, the Gibichung's brother. With the blowing of a mighty trumpet, and a loud call from his own strong throat, Hagen summons his vassals to bid Gunther and Brünnhilde welcome as they reach the hall. Brünnhilde, seeing Siegfried, is horror-struck by his treachery, knowing nothing of the guile which brought it about, and there is a dramatic scene where first Siegfried, and then she, swear on the point of Hagen's spear that what they do is in good faith. Hagen's plot succeeds; he makes Gunther and the vassals understand Siegfried's treachery, and they all agree that it demands the hero's death. Brünnhilde, too, condemns him as false. The Act closes with the joyous music for the two-fold bridal of Siegfried and Gutrune, and Gunther and Brünnhilde. But the grim theme known as the "Motive of Murder" breaks in on the jubilant notes, and it is to its foreboding sound that the curtain falls. That is the Second Act of The Dusk of the Gods, which FRANKFURT and STUTTGART stations are to broadcast this evening.

Salome's Dance

The dreadful story of Salome has attracted artists of almost every order throughout the ages, but none has realised the grim horror of the tragedy with the intensity with which Strauss' music sets it before us. His one-act music-drama was written to a German version of Oscar Wilde's French play, and appeared in Dresden at the end of 1905. Strauss himself calls the work not an Opera but a Drama, and it is the orchestra, rather than the voices, which describes and accentuates the emotions and incidents set before us on the stage. The central point of the whole work is a purely orchestral passage, the Dance of the Seven Veils, which is included in STOCKHOLM's programme this evening, and even those who dislike the work as a whole have always agreed that this is as fine a piece of orchestral tone-painting as even Strauss has ever given us. At first Salome stands motionless while the musicians begin a wild dance-rhythm; then, rising to her full height, she signs to them and at once their playing is subdued to glide into a sinuous rhythm eloquently descriptive of her snake-like movements. The main body of the dance is in waltz measure, and grows more and more in frenzy as Salome throws from her, one after another, the seven veils covering her beauty, to cast herself, at the end, prostrate at Herod's feet.

Paganini (see Turin, 8.45 p.m.)

The Father of Russian Music

Russian music has formed so large a share of the concert programmes of the whole world for the past two generations that it is difficult to realise how recent a growth it is. But, except for folk music, in which it always was specially rich, Russia had no music of its own, broadly speaking, until Glinka founded the national school which has since given us so much that we value and enjoy. A Life for the Czar, his first opera, which was also the first real Russian opera, was produced in 1836 and immediately made it clear that a new Russian school of music had been born. The story is on a patriotic subject, dealing with a revolt by the people against their sovereign, which is eventually overcome. His next opera, Ruslan and Ludmilla, based on one of Pushkin's poems, is a rather strange mixture of fairy lore and Russian legend. Ludmilla has three suitors, of whom she prefers the knight Ruslan. She is carried off by magic powers, and the whole story is taken up with Ruslan's heroic overcoming of one dread spell after another to win his bride in the end. The overtures to both operas are included in the programme which HAMBURG Station broadcasts to-night.

A Dance of Death

In the old Church of St. Katharine, at Lübeck, of which a drawing is reproduced here, there is a famous painting known as the "Lübecker Totentanz." It commemorates the mediæval mystery plays in which mendicant friars used to find a ready way to the sympathies of their hearers. Death was presented in them in a lighthearted guise as the leveller, in whose hands rich and poor were treated alike without fear or favour, and in the Lübeck picture all ranks, from the Pope to the humblest citizen, are shown as equals. Dating from 1643, the painting was originally on wood: it was restored and transferred to canvas in 1701. The symbolism of the picture has inspired the modern composer, Hans Henry Jahn, to write an oratorio which he has called a "Sprech-oratorium," with the title of New Lübeck Dance of Death, in which the text is spoken. It is to be broadcast by HAMBURG this evening, beginning at 9.10, under the direction of Gerhard Maasz. It should offer an interesting comparison with another new oratorio, with spoken text, which was broadcast on Sunday.

St. Katharine's Church, Lübeck

The Heroine of Several Operas

The Abbé Prévost's story of the ill-fated Manon Lescaut has furnished several composers with opera plots: Massenet's, one of the most popular operatic versions, is to be broadcast by RADIO-PARIS this evening. His place in the temple of fame is usually assigned to him on the ground that he knew very well how to give the public of his day exactly such musical fare as its taste demanded. And, on the assumption that its taste was no very critical one, the saying is made to sound like a reproach. But it is only half a truth, and, like every half-truth, wholly unfair. Even if it be true that he catered chiefly for the well-fed, to whom opera is merely a comfortable way of spending an evening, offering them year after year a whole series of banquets of melodious sweetness, he did something more than that. In his hands the old Gounod recipes, enriched by something of Wagner's lavish bigness of conception, helped to mould, as well as to gratify, popular taste, pleasing his conservative adherents without disappointing those who demanded more solid fare than merely luscious melody. He had a real sense of drama, and a very happy knack of effective characterization in his music; these, allied to his apparently inexhaustible fund of fresh, natural melody, any used with a thorough mastery of the orchestra and a sympathetic knowledge of the human voice, are the secrets of his success. In an age which holds refinement and good manners in contempt, which classes courtesy as weakness, there is inevitably some reaction against music of that suave and gracious charm: but only foolish people can deny to Massenet a place of honour as a real master of his craft, and one whose success was worthily earned.

Two Wagner Heroines

The heroines of opera are usually victims of a cruel fate, and only one of Wagner's is an exception to the stern rule; Elsa, in Lohengrin, and Elisabeth, in Tannhäuser, both die long absence from it, to the Hall in which the tournaments of song are held. Since Tannhäuser's mysterious desertion of the Court, she had lost interest in the Hall and its associations. But now she has learned from her guardian, the Landgrave, that Tannhäuser has returned to the company of his fellow minstrel-knights and that once more a great tournament of song is to be held. In an exultant song she tells of her joy in coming once more into the well-remembered place. These two excerpts are to be sung in the COPENHAGEN programme this evening.

The Seventh

To musicians the wide world over, these two words are enough to make it clear that it is Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, in A, which is in question. It is to be broadcast by COPENHAGEN this evening, and by WARSAW at 12.15 on Sunday. It was heard for the first time at an all-Beethoven concert which he conducted himself in Vienna in 1813. Organised by Maëzel, remembered now only by the metronome which bears his name, the concert had the charitable object of raising money for the Austrians wounded at Hanau in the attempt to cut off the French retreat after the battle of Leipzig. Maëzel appeared on the platform himself with a mechanical trumpet-player of his own invention: it played two marches written for it by Beethoven. The symphony won an instant success, and the second movement was encored—a tribute rarely accorded at the first performance of a symphony. It has ever since been one of the most popular of the nine—a very good second to No. 5. It has a long introduction, lovingly expanded by Beethoven: only gradually does it lead to the main brisk (allegro) part of the movement, irresistible in its freshness and gaiety. The second begins with a steady march rhythm, above which violas and cellos together play one of Beethoven's noblest melodies. Another melody, contrasting joyously with the solemnity of the first, is introduced by clarinet. The next movement is in the form of a scherzo and trio, although Beethoven did not call it so. It begins at once with a merry theme, and the tune of the trio is based, so we are told, on an old pilgrim song which originally came from Austria. The last movement brims over with wholesome laughter and bustling good spirits; almost breathless in its haste, it is among the most entirely happy things which Beethoven gave us.

Haydn

Two of whose operas are being broadcast this evening,—The Apothecary, from Stuttgart and Frankfurt, and the three-act Orlando Paladino (Ritter Roland in Germany) from LEIPZIG, relayed by KÖNIGS WUSTERHAUSEN. Both broadcasts are at 8 o'clock.

The Danish Johann Strauss

Lumbye's is a name which often appears in the more lighthearted programmes of COPENHAGEN station; one of his waltzes is being played this afternoon, and Sunday's concerts there included no fewer than six of his pieces. Born in Copenhagen in 1810, he was a contemporary of the Viennese

H. C. Lumbye

Lanner and the elder Johann Strauss, and, like them, devoted his gifts to the music of the ballroom and the march. Like them, too, he had a band of his own; its home was the Tivoli, at Copenhagen, but it made many tours, playing, for the most part, Lumbye's own music, like Kroll's Ballroom Echoes, A Summer Night in Denmark, and many another Danish counterpart of The Blue Danube.

Such was his renown that when he retired at the age of fifty-five—and then, again, he followed the example of the elder Johann Strauss in handing on his task as composer and conductor to a son—he was given the rank of Imperial Councillor. He was Hans Christian Lumbye; the son who followed in his steps was Karl, and another son, Georg, achieved distinction as a composer for the stage. Copenhagen, their birthplace, is rightly proud of them and of the gay music they gave to their own country and its capital.

A Diversity of Orchestras

STUTTGART Station, with FRANKFURT relaying the programme, has had the happy idea of bringing together on one platform—that of the Liederhalle—several orchestras whose usual tasks do not, as a rule, make for community of ideals. The programme is to be opened by a normally constituted concert orchestra, playing Tchaikovsky's Italian Capriccio. It was written during a holiday which he spent in the South, finding there the nearest approach to happiness and peace of mind which was possible to one of his nerve-wracked temperament. He wrote of it confidently, in letters to friends at home, as the gayest music he had conceived for a long time, as having captured in its strain something of the warmth and sunshine in which he was revelling. The Capriccio includes some genuine Italian music, and more than once trumpets sound the actual notes of the call Tchaikovsky was hearing regularly from a cavalry barracks close to his own quarters. That is to be followed by the joyous waltz "Tales from the Vienna Woods," by the younger Johann Strauss. It is a happy coincidence which allows listeners to hear it an hour or so before a piece of Danish dance music of the same splendid order. Not quite, it may be, on the same high level as The Blue Danube, or The Fledermaus Waltz, it is, none the less, such fine music of its class as to have made Strauss's name immortal if he had written no more. From it we are to pass, by way of popular descriptive and march melodies, to the dance tunes of the present day, and, by way of still further variety, to Dajos Bela and his Hungarian "Jazz-Symphonists."

Walpurgis Night

Time was when stout Teutons worshipped Wodan and Freia and the other German gods. On the night of nights when spring overcomes winter they used to go out to the Brocken, the highest mountain in the Harz, to celebrate. The Christians did all they could to prevent them; they even sent out soldiers to drive the worshippers away. But to no avail. The cunning heathens slowly began to weave stories of mystery around their meeting-places. And thus Walpurgisnacht and the Brocken became associated with witches, and in fact the witches' grandmother, Watelinde, was said to attract lovely innocent girls and to turn them into ugly hags. Naturally nobody dared go near those places after dark. Readers, however, who wish to see the witches for themselves have only to set two ploughs crosswise on that dread night, and sit beneath them. HAMBURG station is to stage a broadcast of the eerie revels to-night.

M. Philippe Gaubert

A distinguished member of the Paris Conservatoire is visiting the royal sister school at Brussels this evening to conduct a programme of French music. M. Gaubert is a professor in Paris, conductor of the Conservatoire concerts, and first conductor of the Opéra. He has, however, found time to produce a good deal of music of real importance, and his programme to-night, to be broadcast by both BRUSSELS stations, includes his triptych Chants de la Mer, a work of noble inspiration which has already been warmly welcomed at the Colonne, Poulet, and Conservatoire concerts.

a completely new edition

World-Radio Station Identification Panels Booklet

The arrangement of this well-known booklet has been changed completely to make the entry of dial-readings easier, and to leave room for the writing-in of any other notes necessary. Details of new stations are given: and innumerable revisions made. Here, then, is the perfect log-book! Wave-lengths, frequencies, power, call-signs, interval signals of every European station worth receiving, and some American stations; with a small map.

Young Man!
Go into ADVERTISING

It is a business of unlimited opportunities for the young man of to-day. Over £200,000,000 are spent in Britain alone every year in Advertising. For good and original work the salaries are high and promotion rapid. But it is a specialised business, and you can make a success of it only if you are thoroughly trained. We can train you and qualify you for a good position in from six to twelve months, and, moreover, you can take the course in your spare time wherever you live and without in any way interfering with your present employment. Why be content to jog along in the old way at small pay and with no prospects, when such an opportunity is offered to you? Take the first step by calling, writing or telephoning for full particulars.

FIX A PIX AND BRING IN THOSE
FOREIGN STATIONS

CUT OUT LOCAL SWAMPING
—and cut out local and powerful stations that spoil reception of foreign concerts. A PIX increases the selectivity of any set and is better than expensive gadgets or costly wave-traps. No alteration to sets needed, over 500,000 satisfied users testify to the efficiency of the PIX. Fix a PIX now and bring in loud and clear those elusive foreigners.

READ WHAT THIS SATISFIED USER SAYS:

"The PIX Selector has definitely performed all that you claimed for it. I get 'knife' (I almost said 'razor') edge selectivity and what is as important as anything, 'knife edge' articulation. I have recommended your PIX to my friends—to get a PIX is the only thing to do, the programmes are not the same without it. I can get with a PIX, Regional without fading, and without Stuttgart."

This is a rear view of the chassis in which are shown the Cossor Metallised Variable-Mu and Detector Valves. Observe also the metal coil "pots." The knob on the left controls the wavechange while the gramophone pick-up plug can also be seen. Note the clearly marked multi-way battery lead.

The illustration below shows the front of the chassis of the Cossor Model 732. Note the triple-gang condenser with its drum-drive control, the volume and reaction knobs and on-off switch. On the left is the Cossor 220 P. Output Valve, next to it is the Cossor Metallised 210 H.L. Detector.

Four Valves Two S.G. Stages Single-dial tuning

PRESENT-DAY broadcasting conditions demand a highly selective Receiver. Not only must the Set bring in the desired programme but it must also separate it from the radiation of powerful nearby stations or your enjoyment will be marred by interference. This new Cossor Model 732 embodies most up-to-date developments in valve and circuit design including two Screened Grid H.F. stages in which the latest type of Cossor Variable-Mu Valves are used ensuring extreme sensitivity and a degree of selectivity not otherwise obtainable in a 4-valve Set. This Receiver is exceptionally simple to operate, tuning is effected by a single slow-motion knob, the drum dial being calibrated in wavelengths greatly simplifying selection of the desired station. The Cabinet of this handsome model is solidly built of oak, and encloses a self-contained Loud Speaker of the latest balanced armature type ensuring remarkably true-to-life reproduction of both speech and music at satisfying volume. Leaflet L66 gives full details.

As illustrated above, complete with two Cossor 220 V.S.G., Cossor 210 H.L. and Cossor 220 P. Valves, handsome Oak Cabinet 17 1/2" high, 14 1/2" wide and 10" deep, incorporating latest type of balanced armature Loud Speaker and gramophone pick-up plug. Wavelength range 200-580 and 1,000-2,100 metres.
